GENERAL INFORMATION

EERA Council

The European Educational Research Association (EERA) is an association of associations. EERA membership is made up of national and regional Educational Research Associations, 39 full members and 2 candidate member, from all parts of Europe. It is governed by the Council and the Executive Committee, the academic work is organised in thematic networks, see following pages. The aim of EERA is to further high quality educational research for the benefit of education and society. High quality research not only acknowledges its own context but also recognises wider, transnational contexts with their social, cultural and political similarities and differences.

The association's activities, such as the annual conference, season schools for emerging researchers and publishing, build on and promote free and open dialogue and critical discussion and take a comprehensive and interdisciplinary approach to theory, methods and research ethics.

Local Organising Committee

The Local Organising Committee (LOC) was established at Universität Hamburg’s Faculty of Education. Its academic members represent different backgrounds and various levels of experience in research.

The LOC has worked together with the University’s congress service (Universität Hamburg Marketing GmbH), the EERA Berlin office and the DGfE (Deutsche Gesellschaft für Erziehungswissenschaft/German Educational Research Association) to organise one of the largest conferences to ever be held at Universität Hamburg. This year also marks the 100th anniversary of the university, which makes it even more special to be hosting ECER.

The members of the core organisation team are:

- Prof. Dr. Drorit Lengyel (Universität Hamburg, Chair)
- Prof. Dr. Dr. h.c. mult. Ingrid Gogolin (Universität Hamburg, Chair)
- Katrin Schönert (Universität Hamburg, Project Manager)
- Maren Minuth (Universität Hamburg Marketing GmbH, Project Manager)
- Christina Gaats (Universität Hamburg Marketing GmbH, Project Manager)

Other LOC members are:

- Prof. Dr. Julia Gerick (Universität Hamburg)
- Dr. Christian Helmchen (Universität Hamburg)
- Prof. Dr. Sylvia Kesper-Biermann (Universität Hamburg)
- Prof. Dr. Hans-Christoph Koller (Universität Hamburg)
- Prof. Dr. Claus Krieger (Universität Hamburg, Vice Dean for Research, Faculty of Education)
- Prof. Dr. Christine Mayer (Universität Hamburg)
- Prof. Dr. Silvia Melo-Pfeifer (Universität Hamburg)
- Prof. Dr. Angelika Paseka (Universität Hamburg)
- Prof. Dr. Marco Rieckmann (Universität Vechta, DGfE representative)
- Dr. Tobias Schroedler (Universität Hamburg)

There are many others who deserve a mention here and to whom we would like to express our gratitude, especially those colleagues who have contributed their time and ideas to, for example, chairing ERC sessions or taking part in the ERC ‘Lunch with Local Academics’. Special thanks go to Ute Wett and Christian Scholz from the Faculty of Education’s media centre who will document the ECER via photos and videos (so smile, everybody!).

Acknowledgements

The main objective of LOC is to make the participants’ visit to ECER, as well as to the city of Hamburg, as productive and pleasant as possible! This could not be achieved without the backing of our very generous sponsors to whom we owe a great deal of gratitude.

First and foremost, we would like to thank the Joachim Herz Stiftung (Joachim Herz Foundation), Exclusive Partner of the ECER 2019, without whose financial support neither the friendly ambience nor the full academic programme of this year’s ECER would have been possible.

We owe further thanks to the Deutsche Forschungsgemeinschaft (German Research Foundation), Stiftung Mercator (Mercator Foundation), Hamburgische Wissenschaftliche Stiftung (Hamburg Research Foundation), Claussen-Simon-Stiftung (Claussen Simon Foundation) and the Otto Group for their considerable support.

We are also indebted to the Free and Hanseatic City of Hamburg, in particular to the Senator for Science, Research and Equality, Katharina Fegebank, for generous financial assistance.

Last but not least, we would like to thank the Executive University Board of Universität Hamburg for their financial support, as well as the University Administration for their unwavering help and cooperation during the last three years of planning and organising. Universität Hamburg has made its rooms, facilities and infrastructure available to ECER free of charge. Without such generosity, this wonderful event simply could not have happened.

DEAR CONGRESS PARTICIPANTS,

We live in times of constant societal change and evolution. This change also challenges the field of education. Long-standing educational beliefs are called into question, and what seemed to be right once might be debatable today.

At Joachim Herz Foundation, we are aiming to make education better and more reliable in an era of insecurity. Within our projects, we develop and offer digital tools for a timely approach towards teaching in the fields of science and economics. We organize trainings for teachers to prepare them for the challenges of digitalization. And we promote educational research in order to strengthen the digital skills of future teachers.

Furthermore, we provide support to young people who are eager and talented, and who want to advance in life: with scholarships for high school students as well as with internships for apprentices who want to gain international job experience. We also collaborate with local schools and renowned academics to create effective measures against school-absenteeism.

During ECER 2019, you will explore all kinds of solutions for education in an era of risk and uncertainty. We are excited to be part of your discussions; and we are sure that this conference will provide a stimulus for our work.

DR. NINA LEMMENS

Member of the Executive Board

Hamburg and the Universität Hamburg

The Free and Hanseatic City of Hamburg is not just a city, but a federal state in its own right. With more than 1.8 million inhabitants, this old Hanseatic centre is Germany's second largest city. Situated 100 km inland from the North Sea on the river Elbe, its harbour is the third largest in Europe. The city is surrounded by water and boasts so many bridges, it is often dubbed the Venice of the North. Hamburg, however, has more bridges than Venice and Amsterdam combined! A multitude of theatres, museums, as well as Hamburg's new iconic music hall, the Elbphilharmonie, testify to its status as a leading cultural centre. Hamburg is characterised by its international orientation and the diversity of its population. As Germany's so-called 'gateway to the world' it is the city with the highest number of consulates in Europe and home to people from all over the world.

Universität Hamburg is the largest research and teaching institution in northern Germany, and celebrates its 100th anniversary in 2019. It recently attained the status of 'Excellence University' – one of just 11 universities to be awarded such recognition by the German Federal Ministry of Education and Research as part of its National Excellence Strategy.

Universität Hamburg leads in several key interdisciplinary research areas and fosters an extensive network of academic cooperation with leading institutions at regional, national and international levels. 'Innovating and cooperating for a sustainable future' is the university's guiding principle for research, teaching and organisation. It was one of the first universities in Germany to take account of sustainability in all areas of activity. It is thereby dedicated to achieving the United Nations Sustainable Development Goals.

Around 170 degree programmes are offered across eight faculties: Law; Business, Economics and Social Sciences; Medicine; Education; Humanities; Mathematics, Informatics and Natural Sciences; Psychology and Human Movement, and Business Administration.

With more than 7000 students enrolled in bachelor and master programmes in both, Education Science and Teacher Education, the Faculty of Education at Universität Hamburg is the largest in northern Europe. The faculty also offers three interdisciplinary master's degrees: Multilingual Educational Linguistics (MOTION); Religions, Dialogue and Education, and Performance Studies.

The faculty is characterised by research in all areas of educational studies and subject-specific teaching methodologies. Amongst its wide range of research activities, including a considerable number of externally funded initiatives, the following areas are central to the faculty's research endeavours: Literacy in Diversity Settings, Participation and Education, Teacher Professionalisation, Uncertainty as a Dimension of Pedagogical Action.

ECER Theme

Education in an Era of Risk – the Role of Educational Research for the Future

Our globalised, rapidly changing world is increasingly perceived as risky and unstable. War, violence, environmental disasters, political and economic crises, labour market upheaval – such phenomena are viewed daily, not least on account of the changing media landscape. The gap between rich and poor continues to grow exponentially. International migration, which is partly a consequence of these phenomena, leads to drastic societal change in both donor and receiving regions. Old certainties are questioned, leading to uncertainty and ambiguity regarding, for example, social cohesion, political stability and lasting peace. Europe’s geographical, political and economic model, which has stood for security and stability since WWII, has itself become uncertain. Uncertainty also plays out in individual lives, careers, families and social networks. Such developments are of utmost relevance to education systems worldwide as they are responsible for providing learners with the skills and capacities to live and act under given social conditions. Given that these future conditions can hardly be predicted in the current era of risk, educational processes, developments, and capacity building become uncertain. What do we know about the unfolding of such educational processes in present times and what are the skills and capacities that are needed in this complex situation? How can educational systems – also operating under conditions of uncertainty – provide a basis for the development of those skills and capacities? Which ‘promises’ can educational systems and institutions make to the future generations, and which can they actually keep? What is the role of education itself and educational research in dealing with the aforementioned problems? Can regional experiences and insights be ‘internationalised’, or must we work from context to context?

Educational research has a significant role to play in generating answers to these questions. This is not bound to theory as educational research possesses the tools to empirically examine assumptions and to provide evidence-based knowledge, for instance, as a basis for evidence informed decision making. ECER 2019 in Hamburg will be a platform for educational research that seeks to respond to the questions outlined here. ECER 2019 invites contributions oriented towards the overarching question concerning the role of educational research and practice in providing opportunities for sustainable, peaceful and equitable co-existence that appreciates diversity and diversification under conditions of uncertainty and risk now and in the future.

„University of The World“ – a Cornerstone in an Era of Risk

Dieter Lenzen; Universität Hamburg, Germany
Chair: Ingrid Gogolin, Universität Hamburg, Germany

What will the university and institutions of higher education throughout the world look like in 10 or 20 years? Will they be vocational institutions based upon the most common, that is, utilitarian Anglo-American, model? If so, will they be open to entire single generations? Or will they promote top research designed to supply the industrial sector with new product ideas, innovations, and top personnel, making them institutions for a small elite? Is there a chance that the world’s universities may (once again) become authentic educational institutions with the express purpose of forming individual personality, of cultivating citizens of the world prepared to assume social responsibility? Will these be limited to an educational elite, or can they serve entire generations of young people on all continents? Will, can, or should there be but one kind of university or extensive diversity in the tertiary sector, or post-secondary system? And above all, what is desirable? Which view of higher education will best serve the future of humankind in a unified world? What can we expect if (as yet) very different systems begin to resemble one another? Which model will prove dominant? Who will profit and who will not? What would need to be done to prevent a (perhaps not entirely) arbitrary dynamic from leading the utilitarians to victory in a global university system?

The German university system and continental European post-secondary education are facing fundamental transformation, a process which has to some extent already begun. It was initiated by phenomena such as the Bologna Process, a reform of European universities which seemed at first to result from an exclusively European bid for unity in higher education but which must be seen as part of globalization in the entire post-secondary system in various regions of the world. By adapting certain aspects of the Anglo-American higher education system, the Bologna Process as a fundamental reform of the European university system extends well beyond Europe. It induces continental Europe to espouse views of the tertiary sector which have already gained a foothold in North America, parts of Asia, and even in some of the emerging countries of other continents.

This process of globalization is happening at a rapid pace, without the benefit of international oversight by democratically legitimated organizations. In fact, postsecondary education is essentially governed by a view of education as a commodity. Presumably, this process will accelerate so much in the next one to two decades that educational systems based on other traditions will virtually disappear.

The Science of Learning: Can It Make Learning More Resilient Against the Risks of Modern Education?

Dirk Van Damme; OECD, France
Chair: Paulina Korsnakova, EERA Council Member

For several centuries now, schools have offered powerful institutional environments to human learning based on a knowledge base which has been gradually built over time and transmitted from one generation to another. The knowledge framework in which teachers operate consist largely of transmitted and often not codified professional and experiential knowledge, which only teachers are supposed to fully understand and identify with.

The advent of modern psychology since the end of the 19th century has had a limited impact on the knowledge base of teachers, schools and education policies. But especially particular pedagogical movements – such as the German Reformpädagogik and pedagogies ‘vom Kinde aus’ –, often more ideological than scientific in nature, were able to influence and alter the knowledge base of teaching. The current popularity of such pedagogical orientations shows the strengths of such ideas.

Today, outcomes of empirical research in psychology and social sciences have a hard time to penetrate the knowledge base of teachers and schools. Rigorous research in education is expanding but is hardly able to find its way into innovations in policy and practice. The supply and accessibility of empirical research is growing, but its penetration and acceptance by the educational community still is problematic.

Yet, educational policy and practice is in a huge need of renewal of its knowledge base. A lot of the knowledge on which teachers, schools and policies are founding educational practices is outdated and in some cases outright wrong. The failures of the knowledge base in education to provide adequate answers is related to a number of risks facing education today. I will discuss four main risks: 1) the effectiveness risk: a lot of educational practices in schools are not effective in generating sustainable outcomes; 2) the equity risk: educational practices are designed for the average learner and do not serve learners at both ends of the distribution well; 3) the productivity risk: the per unit cost of education is rising in most countries without equivalent increases in the quality of learning outcomes; 4) the innovation risk: education seems to have a hard time adapting to the age of artificial intelligence and significantly improve and update its modus operandi.

The question then is whether the contemporary science of learning, as it develops today from brain research, neuroscience and cognitive psychology, will be able to shake the knowledge base of modern education, to make it more resilient against these risks and improve learning opportunities.

Educational Research Responses to Dehumanization Tendencies in a Context of Risk

Heila Lotz-Sisitka; Rhodes University, South Africa
Chair: Angelika Paseka, Universität Hamburg, Germany

There is an ongoing discussion about what education is, or ought to be in times of systemic failure, risk and toxic existence. Here the central question arises: Should education be about acculturation in order to ‘progress’, ‘cope’ and ‘adapt’ according to pre-framed scripts, or should education be about transgression of the here-and-now in order to ‘stay with the trouble’ (Haraway, 2016) and re-constitute life more organically under hot, messy, uncertain conditions? Discussions are arising in mainstream educational research on how to teach in times of risk and uncertainty. For example, leading European educational philosopher Gert Biersta (2014, 2017) suggests that education itself is a ‘beautiful risk’ that requires a recovery of teaching in open process form (see also Lotz-Sisitka et al. 2015). From a global policy perspective, UNESCO (2015, 2016) have entered the debate on ‘re-thinking education’ on a planet under pressure, and position education both as a common good, and for the common good. This perspective is as yet under-developed in concept, scope and implication (cf. Lotz-Sisitka, 2017), an issue which I address in this paper. A review of research literature on dehumanization in education shows a general interest in the common good, but this is not systematically articulated, or adequately considered for contemporary conditions of systemic failure, risk, and toxic existence. In this paper, I therefore seek to deepen the analysis of educational research responses to dehumanization in a context of contemporary risk.

In framing the analysis, I draw on Al-Amoudi’s (2019, pg. 182) tri-fold analysis of dehumanization tendencies in the present: 1) DF: denial of human flourishing involving repression of powers for moral and aesthetic reasoning and abilities to act out of love or solidarity, 2) DS: construction and dehumanization of the subaltern via strategies that deny recognition, affective and redistributive justice, and 3) DP: automated processes that replace human activity and thought. I also approach the analysis via a critical reading of Povanelli’s notion of ‘quasi-events’ (e.g. climate change, poverty etc.) (2014, 2018) which require a stance on existence where “potentiality is the refuge not of the hopeful but of the concretely ordinary and pragmatically banal”, and where a form of “cruel [yet possible] optimism” exists as the norm for acting in the conditions and geographies that characterize most ordinary lives (Berlant & Povanelli, 2014).

Via a systematic depth analysis of selected examples from both mainstream and selected sub-fields of educational research (mapping both absences and trends), my analysis of educational research responses to dehumanization tendencies reveal varied forms of 1) complicit ‘blindness’, 2) production of confections, and 3) emergent transgressive gestures of the kind articulated above. I argue that there is need to differentiate educational research responses to dehumanization, and err on the side of emergent transgressive gestures in educational research, curriculum, pedagogy, teaching and learning processes, thereby invigorating a humble yet possible relation between education, political subjectivity and transformative agency (cf. Leeb, 2017) in contexts of risk and toxic existence in ways that are compassionate, rather than liberally over-inflated. This, I argue further, can allow for the human capability of ‘existence’ (taking a stand in existence) (cf Anderson, 2003), guiding a re-thinking of education as and for the common good in times of risk where quasi-events and dehumanizing tendencies co-exist.

Educational Responses to Trauma-Induced Migration: Integrating theory and practice

Karen Block; Melbourne School of Population and Global Health, Australia

Chair: Drorit Lengyel, Universität Hamburg, Germany

Increasing migration flows associated with political, social and environmental crises have profound implications for transit and receiving societies in Europe and across the globe. Forced migration is at its highest level on record with the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees estimating that more than 68 million people are currently forcibly displaced. Labour migration, human trafficking and expected increasing rates of migration due to climate change and associated natural disasters will also continue to shape our society and the world into the future. Education systems must adapt to meet the needs of this changing world and to increasing levels of diversity and inequality within student populations.

The refugee experience entails trauma-precipitated migration and profound disruption to family and social supports. Following migration, refugee-background migrants face additional challenges including learning a new language and navigating culturally unfamiliar service and education systems often radically different from those previously experienced. These challenges are often accompanied by separation of families, discrimination, stigmatising political and public discourses, insecure housing, and poverty. These experiences can leave refugee-background children, youth and families at high risk of long term marginalisation and exclusion with associated threats to social cohesion more broadly. Notwithstanding these challenges, young people and families from refugee backgrounds frequently have high aspirations and parents' hopes for their children's wellbeing and success may have been a prime motivation for migration. Supporting families and their children to succeed in education is recognised as critically important for enabling successful integration and navigation of a new culture and community.

This presentation will consider first some theoretical and conceptual frameworks that can help guide education provider responses to the challenges faced by families from refugee backgrounds. It will conclude by focusing on case studies that demonstrate attempts to translate research theory into practice in order to work collaboratively and positively with refugee-background families and young people.

Global Learning – educational research in an emerging field

Annette Scheunpflug; Otto-Friedrich-University, Bamberg, Germany

Chair: Marco Rieckmann, EERA Council Member

Global Learning may be understood as an educational response to the „fact of a development towards a world society“. The development of world society is accompanied by a wide range of adaptation challenges, such as the development of global social justice, the overcoming of paternalism, or the facilitation of social solidarity and dealing with migration in an era of climate change.

The keynote will be about presenting challenges of learning in this context and reflecting them against the background of empirical data. Why do people hardly target global disparities or global climate change? What are the challenges to act against global social inequality? How should education look like reflecting risky global developments and enhancing the reflection of consequences of human behaviour? It will also be necessary to ask to what extent these challenges are new and significant in terms of human history and in what respect they are different from those crisis diagnoses that usually accompany generational change.

Second, didactic settings on global learning need to be reflected. It will be discussed, to which extend learning arrangements potentially raise awareness of global risks and how to enable awareness of global inequalities. What encourages people to face these challenges in the first place? In this context, informal learning and global learning arrangements play a special role. It is also necessary to discuss whether these concepts per se are appropriate to be globalised or what the spreading “glocality” means for concepts of global learning.

These concepts are challenging research in two ways: From a systematically perspective, the inherent future scenarios on global learning are contingent. Therefore, how to describe distinct teaching on a contingent future in a consistent way? From an empirical point of view, it becomes obvious that the empirical evidence in this working field is not sufficient so far. What sort of empirical research is needed to address these challenges? Moreover, what are the risks associated with this research?

The presentation will highlight a number of future areas of research, and will suggest a framework for research concerning global learning.

Should and Can Education Save the Planet?

Arjen Wals; Wageningen University, The Netherlands

Chair: Stephen McKinney, EERA Council Member

Education unwillingly has become a key mechanism for fostering economic development, innovation and growth. In the meantime, humanity is facing a range of sustainability issues that include: rising inequity, loss of democracy, runaway climate change and mass extinction. These issues can be so overwhelming that they can easily lead to apathy and despair which will only make them bigger. We appear to be at a tipping point where the decisions we make about how to live together will be crucial for the future of our planet. There is no better time than now to ask: What is education for? What if education would serve people and planet rather than just or mainly economic interests? Is this a role education should play? And, if so, what does such an education look like?

Based on emerging research and practices from around the world, I will sketch forms of education and learning that are: responsive, responsible and transformative in light of global sustainability challenges. Sustainability here is not seen as another subject to be added to an overcrowded curriculum, but rather as a continuous quest for finding ways to live more equitably, meaningfully and healthier on the Earth without compromising planetary boundaries and the futures of the coming generations. Such a quest requires a more relational pedagogy that can help establish deeper connections with people, places and other species. Such a pedagogy not only invites reflection on values and ethics, and the utilization of diversity, but also the critiquing and transgressing of the structures and systems that make living unsustainably easy and living sustainably hard.

Against the grain but with the tide, schools around the world, from early childhood education to primary and secondary education, from vocational to higher education, are beginning to re-orient teaching and learning in this vein. They do so by re-designing school grounds, building bridges between school and community, utilizing forms of citizen science, rethinking the way schools use energy, food and water, involving learners in decision-making and design, building-in new concepts like global citizenship, cradle-to-cradle, circularity and biomimicry, and by blending different forms of learning. In the end, taking sustainability seriously in education implies a transition towards more localized curricula, rooted in existential questions and a shift towards more autonomous schools where there is space for inquiry, discovery, empathy and action, always in connection with the bigger world in which the local is nested. Using the UN's Sustainable Development Goals (SDGs) as a backdrop, I will highlight a number of principles, practices and challenges of re-orienting education towards sustainability.

The Moot 2019 15.2

Education and the Return of the Nation: Nationalism in the era of Global Education Policies

Friday 6 September, 11:00 - 12:00

VMP 9 - Lecture Hall

Although scholarship on the rise of a global education policy field has dominated education research for more than a decade, there is less emphasis and attention to national policy frames and translations of these global trends, and even less focus on the ways that national discourses travel and often shape international movements and world politics. This Moot aims to bring the question of the national back into our research inquiry, not because it has ever eclipsed, but due to the fact that it is becoming ever more central in processes of global commensuration and policy alignment. According to the Sustainable Development Goals measurement agendas, and particularly the SDG4 which aims to ‘ensure inclusive and equitable quality education and promote lifelong learning opportunities for all’, national policy and statistical capacity building are a sine-qua-non of the processes of global policy alignment:

‘SDG4 targets and policy priorities should be part of existing national education policies, plans and processes. Efforts to realize SDG4 commitments should not result in parallel or separate plans or processes. SDG4 policy commitments do not exist outside of existing national policies, planning, management and monitoring processes and mechanisms. Rather, existing country-led systems, processes and mechanisms should be supported or strengthened to ensure better alignment/adaptation with global commitments’(UNESCO 2016; 19, emphasis in the original).

The Moot aims to bring together ideas around the relevance of the concepts of policy learning and translation and to juxtapose them to older, perhaps, scholarship on nationalism and the making of national identities and myths. It also invites rethinking why nationalism has become evident in domestic mobilization, protectionist policies, secessionist movements (such as Brexit), and a form of populism at odds with human and civil rights.

How can the concept of nationalism help us understand the role of the nation in being the key mediator between international policy frames and the political work that takes place in the classroom? How might contemporary phenomena, such as populism and the rise of nationalistic discourses, influence the making of national education policy agendas in the next decade? On the other hand, how can national movements renew world politics beyond narrow nationalistic pursuits? How do national policy actors shape and are shaped themselves in the continuous travels between different levels and scales of policy formation?

Lifelong Learning and the Sustainable Development Goals: Probing the Implications and Effects

Tuesday 3 September, 13:15 – 14:45

VMP 9 - Room 30

The 2030 Agenda for Sustainable Development confirmed lifelong learning's status as a recognised ingredient of planning for sustainable and participatory development. Its 17 goals and 169 targets are intended to represent an integrated solution to urgent challenges, meaning that the key dimensions of sustainable development should be considered holistically as interconnected and of equal importance. In this context, the capacity of lifelong learning to build bridges between different types and levels of education and learning and, crucially, between different life spheres and policy contexts, becomes particularly relevant. Especially important are notions of adult learning, training, educating and awareness raising, which are embedded in many of the goals.

Lifelong learning therefore brings implications and effects to bear upon the pursuit of the SDGs and is integral to their achievement. This EERA session will explore how in four key areas: (1) lifelong learning policies; (2) the recognition, validation and accreditation (RVA) of learning outcomes in Latin America and the Caribbean; (3) lifelong learning for literacy and basic skills; and (4) education for sustainable development in higher education institutions.

(1) Lifelong learning policies

As lifelong learning takes place across life and cuts across sectors, it has direct and indirect benefits to a range of agendas. An integrated, inter-sectoral approach to lifelong learning policymaking is thus the responsibility of all ministries and government agencies and, furthermore, should include the private sector and civil society. International targets have a special significance in the process - particularly those of the 2030 Agenda - as they promote lifelong learning opportunities in alignment with national context, traditions, challenges and existing provision.

(2) Recognition, validation and accreditation (RVA) of learning outcomes in Latin America and the Caribbean

RVA is one of the pillars of any lifelong learning policy. By providing visibility to previously unrecognised learning, it boosts learners' self-esteem and motivation, as well as leading to greater well-being and more job opportunities. RVA is at the centre of SDG 4 and, particularly, target 4.3: it is only possible to truly "ensure equal access for all women and men to affordable and quality technical, vocational and tertiary education, including university" by developing RVA. Through a comparative analysis of countries in Latin America and the Caribbean, some similarities, differences and suggested future directions emerge.

(3) Lifelong learning for literacy and basic skills

SDG target 4.6 envisages a minimum proficiency level in literacy and numeracy which is equivalent to the level achieved upon successful completion of basic education. There are three closely interrelated dimensions of "lifelong literacy", namely (1) literacy as a lifelong learning process; (2) literacy as a life-wide process; and (3) literacy as part of sector-wide reforms towards lifelong learning systems. Trends are emerging, such as the need for an expanded vision of literacy and greater progress before literacy (and numeracy) are tackled from a lifelong learning perspective. This could have a transformative effect on the achievement of the SDGs.

(4) Education for sustainable development in higher education institutions

Education for sustainable development (ESD) provides a means of ensuring healthy living environments by raising awareness of climate change, pollution, mental and physical health risks and the need for environmental protection. Sustainable development is an urgent task for our society and is attracting increasing attention. Higher education institutions (HEIs), like all other organisations within our society, are called upon to deal with the associated challenges. The task of HEIs is to deal theoretically, conceptually, methodically, critically, and reflectively with the processes and conditions of transformation, in order to contribute towards ensuring that sustainability is implemented in a specific context..

Issues of "Openness" – BarCamp on Related Experiences, Issues and Challenges

Tuesday 3 September, 15:15 – 16:45

VMP 8 - Room 106

Open Access, Open Science, Open Educational Resources and Practices as well as other issues of "Openness" are controversially discussed and circulated within the European Educational Sciences communities. Especially but not only, Open Access and changing practices in academic publishing, as well as Open Educational Resources, and Open Science are challenging traditional and established practices of our daily work. This move to make science more open offers new opportunities but raises various questions, too. Uncertainties surrounding these issues may impose concerns to colleagues in Educational Sciences. Likewise, various institutions, departments, and colleagues have already established good and fruitful practices with some of those issues of "Openness". The EERA offers this innovative exchange on those new issues to eventually develop a joint position.

In this EERA session, we want to share our positive experiences but also discuss some problematic and hot issues. We feel that it is necessary to exchange ideas with interested colleagues from all networks in a relatively low-threshold way. To facilitate this exchange and the discussion on "Openness", we will adapt the BarCamp-format which allows participants to share their ideas and concerns actively and to have their issues discussed during the session. Experts may give their expertise and share experiences, too. BarCamp is a format of un-conferencing, where particular topics and presentations are not organised by a centralised leadership, but instead, they form themselves in before or during the session.

Topics that bother the initiators (chairs) are for example "financing platinum open access journals", or "experiences in editorial workflows in Open Access and Open Educational Resources". What are your topics and questions? We kindly invite you to join us on hackmd.io/qncX3T8CQA68Chm1wAYJXQ, and to share your questions and topics you want to raise during the session. Please share your Twitter name in addition to your topics in the document. To refer to this session on Twitter, please use #ECER2019_OA. You are invited to announce, share and discuss your issues on "Openness" on twitter using #ECER2019_OA.

The open, innovative format of this EERA session and the discussion aims at including the ideas, visions and concerns of all participants, and seeks to draw a picture of the state of the debate on Open Science. The discussion will be supported by a collaborative writing document (<https://hackmd.io/qncX3T8CQA68Chm1wAYJXQ?both>) and tools to record and share ideas. Thus, the documentation and results of this EERA session will be available to all networks to start or deepen a discussion on Open Science and related topics. We see this EERA session as kind of a kick-off event to get into a debate and to eventually develop an EERA vision on Open Access,

Open Educational Resources and Open Science. The BarCamp will be accompanied by the panel discussion "Open Science at the European Educational Science Landscape - Activities and Challenges" and an Open Science/Open Access-stand alongside the publishers, where initiatives are invited to present their ideas and journals are invited to present themselves through brochures and leaflets. We are welcoming everybody who is involved or affected by Openness in the field of Educational Sciences for creating a space of fruitful discussions.

Promoting the Development of (Multi)literacies in Multilingual Societies: Challenges and Opportunities

Wednesday 4 September, 09:00 – 10:30

Faculty of Law - Room 17

This symposium will focus on the educationally relevant yet still largely unexplored issue of multiliteracies in multilingual societies. It will approach the complex phenomenon of multiliteracies from three perspectives: multiliteracy as a language repertoire in multilingual students, multiliteracy as digital resources, and school policies towards both. By stressing particularly the global and interdisciplinary relevance of this phenomenon, this session will furthermore specifically address the potential barriers and benefits which arise on students' ways of becoming multiliterate. The overall purpose of this symposium is to foster the exchange of ideas amongst educational researchers across different subject areas and to promote collaboration on investigating multiliteracies in national and international contexts. Be it digitally or language centered, multiliteracies have certain common features. They appear as multifaceted, multimodal, and non-static phenomena, which are emerging and changing in relation to particular social context (Mills, 2016). Especially the dynamics of their appearance may puzzle educators and policy makers leaving them rather unprepared to integrate the multiliteracy pedagogy into educational settings in Europe and beyond. Furthermore, both, language and digital multiliteracies may represent crucial prerequisites for students' educational attainment across different subject areas and may influence their future career prosperity. The aim of this symposium is, therefore, to stimulate an interdisciplinary talk on the role of multiliteracies between educational researchers across different subject areas. The first paper of this symposium will explore multiliteracies considered as writing skills in multilingual students in Germany. By empirically revealing students' multilingual profiles, it will provide a resources-oriented perspective on students' multiliteracies. The second paper will explore the challenges of acquiring multiliteracies in a linguistically diverse context in Northern Belgium and discuss the deficit perspective on multilingualism within school language policies. The third and the final paper will shed light on multiliteracies as digital practices in and out of school in Spain. Similarly to the results on language multiliteracies, digital multiliteracies also experience unpreparedness of school to embrace the whole spectrum of their potential, which fosters students to compensate this misbalance by applying digital resources for informal learning in out of school domains.

With our symposium, we call for joining forces to further research the multiliteracies, their impact on students' educational attainment, and their integration into the learning process across different subjects. The necessity for an interdisciplinary research is particularly evident as it would draw the attention of policy makers and educators to provide the opportunities for preserving and promoting multiliteracies in linguistically diverse contexts.

The Importance of Contextualising Educational Research: What is the European dimension?

Wednesday 4 September, 13:30 – 15:00

VMP 8 - Room 106

The EERA mission statement affirms that: "High quality research not only acknowledges its own context but also recognises wider, transnational contexts with their social, cultural and political similarities and differences" (EERA). This has been a founding principle for an association that encompasses over 35 national and regional educational research associations, each with its own particular history and character. While this axiom clearly emphasises the importance to contextualise research, the degree to which educational research, and particularly its findings, are considered in the light of national, regional or local characteristics, varies strongly. Certain conference papers and research articles neglect any context, implicitly assuming that the mechanisms analysed are universal in time and space. Others describe the spatial and historical context of their research in detail. There also seems to be a disciplinary divide here with educational research papers with a sociological or socio-psychological background being more likely to follow a strong contextual perspective, and papers with a psychological or cognition science focus emphasising context to a lower extent.

Against this background, this session has two objectives: First, the participants will reflect and discuss on the importance of considering contexts in educational research from different disciplinary perspectives. Do we all need to focus on context to the same extent? When does contextualisation appear to be essential? Are there even research issues that do not need to be contextualised? Second, this EERA session taps on a key question of this association – the European dimension.

What is the European dimension? What does considering the European dimension in research articles and conference contributions imply? Is the European dimension defined by the EU and its commitment to a collective political project, Europe as a geographical entity, or single European countries with distinctive educational histories and outlooks who operate merely as good neighbours. How does this dimension relate to global, national, regional and local levels of analysis?

The session is conceptualised in terms of a round-table discussion with a strong participation of the audience. In the first part, five different round-table contributors, speaking from their own disciplinary backgrounds (Sociology, Educational Sciences, Psychology, History, Cognitive Science), will consider what "contextualising" research means in their own context and the part this plays in developing a rich educational research community across national boundaries. This is followed by a discussion of above-mentioned questions within the round-table and beyond. In the second part, each of the round-table participants briefly mentions what the European dimensions means to her or him. In a next step, all participants discuss about the European dimensions. A final step of the EERA session is dedicated to a summary of the discussion considering both issues – contextualisation in general, European dimension in particular.

From Project Funding to Sustainability in Educational Reforms – Which Innovation Capabilities Do We Need?

Wednesday 4 September, 15:30 – 17:00
Faculty of Law – Room 18

This proposal for a joint WERA-EERA-session with the title “From Project Funding to Sustainable Reform – Which Innovation Capabilities Do We Need?” addresses the question of which structural requirements must be in place in order to facilitate sustainable change in the field of public education. It proceeds from the assumption that a more productive interplay between educational research and practice would be critical for the development of new solutions to current educational problems and future challenges.

However, when it comes to the improvement of educational practices and policies, the outcomes of the last decades of research-practice collaboration seem to be limited at best and key problems such as high numbers of school dropouts remain unsolved in many countries.

The discussion in the proposed session proceeds from the premise that this unsatisfactory diagnosis may be due to the lack of a robust R&D infrastructure for educational improvement (Bryk and Gomez 2008). Today, research is usually organized in the form of projects. Yet, even the most ambitious programmes frequently lack the financial resources and, in particular, the time which would be needed to develop effective and viable solutions and to match the size of the challenges they address. As a result, a multitude of poorly coordinated parallel innovation projects blossom and wither, leaving rather limited and highly fragmented impact on educational practice (if any).

A strategy to overcome these predicaments might focus on the provision of more adequate supportive environments for developers and providers of new and more effective solutions (e.g., Glazer and Peurach, 2013). This assumption is corroborated by research on industrial product development as well as social-technological innovation. It demonstrates the relevance of supportive structures which enable researchers and (social) entrepreneurs to conduct experiments aimed at the development of viable new technologies, products and services which are pursued over long periods of time (e.g. Van de Ven et al 1999; Geels, 2002).

Against this backdrop, the panel discussion will circle around the following questions: (1) What alternatives to projects are there, and what is known about their strengths and weaknesses? Examples include long-term partnerships between research and practice as well as laboratory schools and innovation networks. (2) How should these potential building blocks of an architecture of innovation structures be designed and combined if they are to facilitate the generation of promising new solutions with the potential for genuine improvements? (3) Which measures should guide the selection of such promising approaches which might then be supported over long periods of time? (4) By means of which structures can we facilitate the sustainable integration of successful new solutions into the prevailing system? (5) What implications does this have for the designers of interventions, policy makers and both public and private funders of educational research and reform programs?

Our session thus aims at the development of a better and more nuanced understanding of those structural preconditions which are required for sustainable improvement to become possible in the first place. At the same time, we want to explore both the practical and scholarly implications this new perspective might entail.

Crossing Boundaries in Teacher Education in Germany

Wednesday 4 September, 17:15 – 18:45
VMP 8 – Room 208

In Germany, the structure of teacher education reflects the structure of each of the 16 German state's school systems. Pre-service teacher education programs address primary and secondary school as well as vocational training. In the following we will focus on the example Hamburg with special emphasis on tracks in primary and secondary school teacher education as the structure of teacher education and its difficulties in Hamburg are reflecting general problems and challenges.

Teacher training programs are strictly divided into a first academic phase at university (5 years) followed by an in-service training phase called “Referendariat” (1.5 years). The academic phase encompasses an undergraduate (Bachelor degree, 3 years) and a graduate program (Master degree, 2 years). Here, pre-service teachers usually take courses in at least two subjects offered by the respective faculties. The faculty of education offers courses in general education, developmental psychology, subject specific teaching and learning, and school pedagogics. Students complete internships at school in both, the Bachelor and the Master program. While the major objective of each of the tracks on university level is to provide subject specific content knowledge, pedagogical knowledge as well as pedagogical content knowledge, the second phase of teacher education enables candidates to be successively immersed into the school system. During the second phase of teacher education teacher candidates are supported by highly professional teacher trainers at a teacher education seminar, in Hamburg the so-called “State Institute for Teacher Education and School Development”. Next to them, in-service teachers act as mentors at school.

The pre-service teacher education program in Hamburg is rather complex reflecting the complexity of any other teacher education program in Germany.

Different professionals (university staff in several faculties, teacher trainers, mentors) contribute in different ways (e.g. teaching content, training of specific skills, development of professional beliefs), on different levels (Bachelor, Master, second phase) and at different institutions (university, State Institute, school) to the professionalization of future teachers. What pre-service teachers have to learn is demanding! Teacher training programs have to support professional development towards reflective and effective noticing. This comprises the perception and interpretation of contingent classroom incidents relevant to learning as well as teachers' decision-making (e.g. changing a lesson plan). As an indispensable prerequisite, different kinds of professional knowledge have to be presented in ways to allow the development of an integrated, structured and flexible knowledge base.

The project “Professional Actions of Teachers in Order to Promote Subject-Related Learning” (ProfaLe) funded by the German Ministry of Education and Research aims at crossing boundaries across faculties inside university as well as across university, second phase of teacher education and schools. Firstly, the symposium briefly introduces into the structure of pre-service teacher training at the University of Hamburg as an example of German teacher education. Secondly, a first field of action in ProfaLe will be presented where scholars teaching a particular subject like German or Mathematics on university level collaborate with scholars at the Faculty of Education. The major objective is to teach subject specific knowledge in more integrated ways towards building stronger connections between content knowledge and pedagogical content knowledge. Thirdly, a second field of action in ProfaLe will be presented.

Here scholars on university level collaborate with professional teacher educators from the State Institute as well as with mentors at school. Their collaboration is aiming at an intensified exchange of professional teachers' and pre-service teachers' perspectives on teaching and learning.

The presentations close with a summary of findings from both kinds of boundary-crossing and draws conclusions for teacher training. The symposium closes with a discussion presented by Prof. Andreas Borowski (University Potsdam).

Challenges and Aspects of a Research-Based Agenda for Teacher Education for the Use of ICT in Classrooms

Thursday 5 September, 09:00 – 10:30
VMP 8 – Room 21

Building a research-based agenda for teacher education requires a broad basis of data. For an agenda focusing digital skills these data should cover a range of aspects: national or international specifications and standards for teacher education, e.g., DigCompEdu (Redecker, 2017), pre-service teachers' prior knowledge and characteristics of course concepts which are effective for the development of digital competencies, for example those linked to TPACK and the use of ICT in classrooms. It is achieved to develop and discuss an effective concept for academic pre-service teacher education at universities targeting digital competencies based on data collected for the listed aspects. Therefore, this symposium focusses on four different aspects related to the development of such a concept for a research-based agenda for science teacher education:

First, empirical data on pre-service science teachers' experience with digital media in school and at university is collected (Thyssen et al., 2018). With these data, their prior knowledge and resulting desiderata in digital competencies can be described. Based on these data content and aims of courses designed for the development of ICT competencies can be deduced (Abstract A).

Second, the symposium will summarize the results of a study on courses for pre-service teachers. 12 courses designed by fellows of the Kolleg Didaktik: digital were evaluated in their effectiveness to foster ICT competencies of pre-service science teachers (Vogelsang et al., 2019). Despite different objectives and types of digital media used in these courses, the results of the study indicate that it is possible to trigger positive effects on the pre-service science teachers' motivation, self-efficacy and attitudes towards the use of digital media in classroom instruction (Abstract B & C).

At German universities, science teacher education programs basically consist of three academic subjects: science (biology, chemistry and/or physics), pedagogy and science education. This subjects mainly cover content knowledge (CK), pedagogical knowledge (PK) and pedagogical content knowledge (PCK), as described in the PCK-model (Shulman, 1986). Also, teaching with digital media needs/relies on PCK-model based skills and competencies however technological knowledge (as described by the TPACK model, cf. Mishra & Koehler, 2006) and related skills and competencies have to be developed as well (Koehler et al., 2014). Therefore, an agenda for science teacher education has to integrate this technological perspective into existing curricula without neglecting non-digital components. Since course time at universities is limited, new strategies for teaching should initiate synergies and integrate all different lecturers and teacher educators involved in the educational process. In this sense, the third aspect of the symposium will be discussing a framework for the science teacher education (biology, chemistry and physics), which will cover competencies and knowledge related to digital media and tools. This framework will include categories derived from inquiry and experimental procedures. The framework will also suggest integrating lecturers from different backgrounds such as TCK (Technical Content Knowledge) or TPK (Technical Pedagogical Knowledge). For example, it is not necessary to cover certain digital techniques such as image analysis which is used in modern scientific research, in courses focusing on science education. Such techniques, however, could be an obligatory element of lectures in the technical science disciplines (e.g., biology or physics). The workload of teaching these techniques could be distributed on science, science education and pedagogic courses with a focus on TCK, TPACK or TPK, respectively. Pedagogic courses could cover the methodological implementation of digital techniques and their organizational challenges. Meanwhile, specialized science education courses could demonstrate how these techniques can be usefully integrated into school lessons (Abstract B).

Multiple Facets of Multiple Languages. Deep Drilling in Phenomena of Language Development and Education in Multilingual Contexts

Thursday 5 September, 13:30 – 15:00
Faculty of Law - Room 12

Linguistic diversity and its consequences for education is a highly significant topic for virtually all European countries. In-migration – the primary driver of increasing linguistic diversity in a national society – is no longer a feature faced by a selected group of North-Western European countries, but in the meantime also by European regions that traditionally functioned as source regions of migration rather than receiving regions. In a European perspective, it is crucial for the development of adequate strategies for dealing with diversity to exchange about phenomena and developments that may (or with good reasons may not) comprise of model cases for other contexts. The proposed symposium strives to present German research results and discuss their validity, scope and generalizability in a European perspective.

The consequences of linguistic diversity for education are controversially discussed. On the one hand, it is seen as an impediment for individual development as well as social consistency. On the other hand, the positive potential that can be associated with multilingualism is underlined. This potential is seen for both, individual development as well as the social coherence, cultural creativity and innovativeness of a society.

The “bi- or multilingualism controversy” can be traced back in history, yet only fairly recently we begin to have significant data at command which allows for scientifically substantiated opinion making. The contributions to our symposium present examples of such data, deriving from research in longitudinal or trend perspectives. Contributions are related to

a) results of a worldwide unique longitudinal study which observes language development of roughly 2000 students in their languages German, English, heritage languages Turkish or Russian, and 2nd foreign languages French or Russian over three years (4 waves of data collection). The data comprises of receptive (reading) and productive (writing) tests in all languages concerned (Gogolin, Usanova, Klinger).

b) results from a trend study on adult literacy (2nd Leo level 1 study) with the general question how many people in Germany can be assigned to which levels of literacy. Background information (e.g. on age, gender, migration background, socio-economic factors) is available for in depth data analysis. The study includes around 7,200 German-speaking adults aged 18 to 64. The size and sample selection allow for conclusions about the total German population (Grotluschen).

c) results from a small scale in depth-study on language acquisition and development of children with a refugee background encountering German for the first time in their Kindergarten groups. The study shows exemplar language development biographies over one year of children who live and learn under highly vulnerable conditions (Licandro).

Education Research At Risk In Europe: What are the scientific, ethical, political and practical implications?

Thursday 5 September, 13:30 – 15:00
VMP 8 – Room 208

As the ECER 2019 theme emphasizes, in an era increasingly perceived as unstable, unsustainable and at risk, educational processes, developments and capacity building become uncertain. Educational research (ER) is seen as having a pivotal role to play in generating answers to the many questions arising from this unstable landscape. However, ER itself is not exempt from risks that can hinder the ability to deal with this task. This workshop examines the types of risk that contemporary scholars struggle with and engage with different efforts tonavigate such a landscape of risk in order to ensure the continued relevance and impact of ER.

Examples from such a landscape of risk could be how scholars in many countries face violence, prosecution or restrictions (SAR, 2018). Scholars are at times forced to limit their activities and mobility, or face isolation from the scientific community. Moreover, academic freedom is also at risk beyond the individual level: worldwide, a number of HE organisations are currently under attack, suffering political coercion and intimidation, and even forced to shut down or relocate (Karran et al., 2017).

ER is also at risk for institutional reasons, as some public authorities and private companies investing in research push scholars to soften or eliminate conclusions that are not in line with the results they expect (Drenth, 2010). Another fundamental risk is in ER is seen when research freedom is threatened by economic pressures. Scholars from low-GDP countries are excluded from the scientific debate because of the growing cost of research in a competitive global environment, unable to afford access to expensive databases, equipment or conferences. In addition, ER is suffering from the economic pressure created by current neoliberal policies (Cheek, 2017). Pursuing a ‘competition fetish’, such polices strongly influence the way ER is conceived, reducing research to a less critical and more marketable commodity (Naidoo, 2018). Moreover, economic support for ER is at stake: the recent trend of international R&I programmes (such as Horizon 2020) shows that, while investigation in SSH is underfunded compared to hard sciences, investigation in education is underfunded within the SSH sector (European Commission, 2017).

Another risk is the pressure towards standardisation and ranking (Biesta, 2015; Hargreaves et al., 2010; Waaijer et al., 2018). Scholars are urged to produce a growing quantity of papers, whose quality is evaluated according to the evidence-based model imported from other research paradigms. This process, while limiting the space for critical reflection, reinforces a hierarchical ranking of scientific publications. Young scholars are especially at risk of seeing their career opportunities reduced to a race for impact factor.

Finally, the mounting wave of intolerance toward certain sections of the population (e.g. women, migrants, LGBT...) raises serious concern about the future of scholars and research programmes working on those topics (Ahrens et al., 2018). Actions to abolish entire research areas (such as gender or Roma studies) are already in place in several countries.

The workshop will provide a space for exploring the following questions:

- What are the continuities and discontinuities seen across transnational contexts regarding the struggles experienced in relation to ER at risk?
- As European researchers in the field of education, what strategies can we promote to protect ER freedom and overcome the challenges?
- What are the scientific, ethical, political and practical implications of addressing those risks as researchers?

The workshop is organized as an interactive session with brief presentations, followed by facilitated group discussions and reflections. It will conclude with a discussion of what are the general and specific challenges across these different contexts and areas, and what we can learn from each other.

Educational Assessment in an Era of Innovative Learning Technologies: New Challenges, new Solutions?

Thursday 5 September, 15:30 – 17:00
VMP 8 – Room 208

This proposal for a joint WERA-EERA-session with the title ‘Educational assessment in an era of innovative learning technologies: new challenges, new solutions?’ brings together international research on the question if and in what ways the development of new technologies for teaching and learning affects (positive or negative) educational assessment. New technologies open up a wide range of possibilities to optimize assessment, for example in the context of Large Scale Assessment Studies. Here, new technologies are applied and tested with respect to the quality of testing procedures. One example here is that test participants differ considerably in the time they spend on a task.

Individual differences in processing strategies can lead to different performances, i.e. they can influence the measurement and impair its comparability. It is, however, argued that the application of new technologies can control for such factors. Developments like this follow the desire to increase the throughput as well as the quality of assessment. But in the end they stay connected with ‘conventional’ modes of testing as well as their aims and objects. For the proposed symposium we ask the question whether new technologies will lead not only to innovations of the ‘how’ to test, but also of the ‘what’? Can we expect inventions that allow us to, for example, assess the quality of a student’s solution rather than the appropriateness with a prefabricated set of potential correct answers? What will ‘artificial intelligence’ add to future methodologies of educational assessment? Will a ‘human rater’ become superfluous in the future? And how would developments like these affect the traditional, already fragile ‘interaction’ between teaching, learning and assessment in education?

The contributions to the symposium will present state of the art knowledge on new technologies and assessment, associated with critical reflections on the desired and undesirable implications of such developments.

Teacher Resilience in an Era of Risk: New insights and directions for future research

Tuesday 3 September, 17:15 – 18:45
Faculty of Law - Room 13

The session aims at being a forum to present and discuss latest research findings on teacher resilience under given social conditions. It brings together international research conducted in Europe, Asia, Africa and Australia. The session enriches relevant theory and research in the field of teacher professional development, teacher education and school leadership. The attention is paid to issue of structural processes that enable and constrain teacher resilience.

In the session innovative approaches to exploring teacher resilience are highlighted as well as directions for future research. The contributors to the session aim to answer the following questions:

- What kind of research is important regarding the issue of teacher resilience in era of risk?
- What are the factors that influence the resilience process?
- How can educational systems – operating under conditions of uncertainty – provide a basis for the development of the capacities that are needed for becoming resilience teachers?

Qing Gu builds upon but extends current understanding of resilience in teachers by exploring the nature of teacher resilience from a social ecological perspective. The research upon which the paper is based adopted a mixed-methods design involving a sample of 455 primary and secondary school teachers in Beijing. Her paper reports results from the questionnaire analyses. The analyses revealed robust underlying dimensions of school leadership, relational and organisational conditions and their direct and indirect effects on resilience in teachers.

Maria Assunção Flores reports on a study which sheds additional light upon the factors that influence teachers’ capacity to be resilient, not only in their early stages, as much of extant literature focuses on, but in all phases of the teaching career, especially experienced teachers. Data were collected through a national survey (n=2702 teachers), focus group (n=99 teachers) and interviews to 11 school principals in Portugal. Findings suggest the connection between teacher commitment and resilience which are associated with issues of school culture and leadership, a sense of vocation, and teachers’ beliefs and professional values.

Denis Beutel reports on qualitative research conducted with preservice teachers in a graduate entry teacher education program in eastern Australia as they prepared for their professional experience in primary school contexts. A social-ecological lens was used to explore the personal strategies and contextual resources that the preservice teachers drew upon to manage the workload demands and stresses of teaching that impacted on both their personal and professional lives. Professional experience contexts were also identified as central in facilitating or inhibit preservice teacher resilience.

Liesel Ebersöhn deliberates that teacher resilience of in-service teachers in remote schools can be promoted through professional development in higher education engagement. She argues that higher education engagement brings professional development opportunities to isolated teachers, culminating in better than expected teacher resilience outcomes. She draws on retrospective narrative data and posits that macro-system constraints inherent to structural disparity can be addressed by tapping into macro-level structural opportunities afforded by higher education.

Joanna Madalińska-Michalak, on the basis of her own qualitative research on school principals leadership and school improvement in times of change, discusses the forms and practices of school principals who take care of teacher resilience. Joanna concludes that resilience in teachers can be nurtured by school principal leadership by creating the conditions for the development of the school workplace in the psychological, intellectual, social and organisational dimensions. Authentic and positive leadership, where the facilitation of good relationships, and the responsibility for dialogue between individuals and groups are needed for enabling teachers to sustain their commitment and effectiveness over their professional lives, in contexts of challenge and change.

The session is significant for the following Networks 01, 10, 22, 26, 27 and 32.

Uncertainty as Chance for Learning Processes in the Context of ‘Bildung’

Friday 6 September, 13:30 – 15:00
VMP 8 – Room 21

Uncertainty is a constitutive element of teaching and appears in different manifestations: in the choice of topics for teaching, which should be oriented towards an open future, in interactions in the classroom when a lesson content encounters more or less motivated students, in the unforeseeable dynamics of a school class, in non-guaranteed effects of impulses for learning and in school cultures which are determined by criteria beyond the planning capability of teachers. Teachers often find themselves swamped by these forms of uncertainty.

However, this is only one face of uncertainty. The other embeds it in concepts of learning. The notion of experiential learning, which goes back to considerations by John Dewey and was elaborated by Combe and Gebhard (e.g. 2012), is based on the production of uncertainty by provoking irritations and crisis on the part of the learners by the teachers. Following this idea, it is the teachers who induce crises, they become ‘crisis inducers’ (‘Kriseninduzierer’). Such irritations and crises are thought to be starting points for learning as they question matters of fact when they reveal discrepancies, shifts and differences towards expected outcomes and anticipated results, when ‘something’ crosses the threshold of our attention and interest. In this sense, teachers are not suffering from uncertainty. Quite the opposite: they have to awaken uncertainty, irritations and crises in their students. If they are successful, and the students start to ask questions, deep learning processes are able to occur. Such learning is not superficial; it has the potential to change their access to the world and transform existing patterns of thinking. In the German tradition for this kind of learning, the term 'Bildung' is used. Hans-Christoph Koller, who is an expert in this field, will present the main ideas behind this concept and elaborate the transformative processes of Bildung.

At the University of Hamburg, a research group has been established to discuss uncertainty in the context of Bildung in general, but also in the context of the subjects taught in schools. This is a new approach and will be presented by some of the members of the research group (Ingrid Bähr, Andreas Bonnet, Britta Lübke, Kerstin Michalik and Sandra Sprenger). The idea is to emphasize the special challenges deriving from uncertainty in the subject and combine this idea with the concept of Bildung.

Following these ideas and using uncertainty in teaching creates special requirements for teachers: They must become aware that they are not guardians of specific knowledge but should instead accept ambiguity and have the courage to ask questions where there are no answers. Simultaneously, they need a special sensitivity for the heterogeneity of children and their different accesses to subjects. They should be able to build bridges between irritating content and children's thoughts by creating an open-minded atmosphere for conversation and an open dialogue. Teachers need the competence to put the students' statements into a broader context and contrast the different ideas that students may have. These abilities need a "situated creativity" (Combe & Paseka 2012) to cope with uncertain situations.

Given the two sides to uncertainty, its consequences for teacher education must also be discussed. How can such abilities be developed in university courses? There are some approaches currently under discussion, e.g. case analyses, inquiry-based learning or working with videos, but alternative approaches have to be taken into consideration as well. These options have to be used to discuss learning processes in the context of Bildung - also in teacher education.

Writing Retreat Network 10

Do you have a book, chapter, journal article, research proposal or conference abstract/paper that you need time to work on?

In response to requests from members of NW10 and as a way to build community and offer support for colleagues we are pleased to offer a ECER writing retreat in Hamburg. Although the event is sponsored by Network 10: Teacher Education the retreat is open to ALL attendees of ECER 2019. ## Introduction to MAXQDA MAXQDA is a powerful tool, which makes it easy for you to organize, evaluate, and interpret qualitative and mixed methods data, create easy-to-read reports and visualizations, and connect and share with other researchers (www.maxqda.com). The workshop consists of a mixture of demonstrations and guided practice, focusing on the practical knowledge required for using MAXQDA for the analysis of qualitative data.

After completing this workshop, participants will be able to prepare and import documents to be analyzed in MAXQDA. They will be familiar with the basic functions necessary for analyzing qualitative data, from creating and managing a code system to coding documents to retrieving coded segments. They can also use deeper analysis techniques and memos to hold and organize ideas and thoughts. They will be able to conduct simple and complex lexical searches and automatically code search results.

Subject matter

- Creating projects
- Preparing and importing documents
- Creating codes
- Coding document segments
- Assign code colours
- Doing text retrieval
- Creating and managing memos
- Further functions may be explained, e.g. working with standardized data (variables), MAXMaps for data visualization, Summary Grid to work with summaries or Smart Publisher for automatic reporting.

Please bring your own laptop equipped with MAXQDA 2019 (a 14-day trial version can be downloaded here).

Towards Understanding the Role of Adult Education and VET in Promoting Active Citizenship and Inclusion: Lessons from cross-national research

This interactive workshop is open to all who are interested in the issues relating to education, training and the social inclusion of young adults in vulnerable situations.

The workshop will aim to instigate and support cross-national research collaborations in the field of VET and adult education. Specific strategies for future research projects will be considered and an agenda for future cooperation will be discussed.

The workshop builds on the H2020 Project 'Adult Education as a Means to Active Participatory Citizenship' (EduMap). The EduMAP Horizon 2020 project (2016-2019) has been about advancing the understanding of the role of adult education in promoting the social inclusion and active participation of young adults across Europe, considering its current and future impact on learning, development and life chances in an era of risk. The recent debate on active citizenship and adult education has been strongly underpinned by the discussion on how active citizenship could be exercised in a way that would promote inclusion and participation. The workshop will focus on the role played by adult education and VET in contributing to motivating young adults in vulnerable life situations to become active citizens. Engaging adults through different forms of VET contributes strongly to addressing their specific needs and requirements and facilitating their participation in social, economic and civic/political life in their relevant contexts and spaces.

During the workshop, the organisers will provide insight into the findings of the EduMap project. Those attending will then be invited to reflect on their experience, relating to research on vulnerable groups and the role of VET and adult education. This workshop will provide an opportunity for both the discussion of findings from the EduMap project and for reflecting on wider issues, and

How to Navigate the Ocean of Information in Educational Research? Hands-on workshop on literature databases and smart search strategies

Researchers deal with bibliographic research on a daily basis and are experts in retrieving the information they need. Yet, there exist many literature services and they sometimes are not explicit about their scope of publications. Educational research often calls for a transdisciplinary and transnational state of knowledge, which is distributed - and occasionally hidden - in several databases. To avoid getting lost in searching but instead successfully navigate the ocean of information, a combination of knowledge about various databases, retrieval methods and search strategies is needed. As there is no one-stop solution in information seeking, the choice of databases, search engines and academic social networks remains an individual and research-related decision.

In a first step, the workshop aims to provide an overview of existing literature services, taking into account the publishing culture in educational science and concentrating on specialized databases in the field. Pros and cons will be considered with regard to the coverage of different media types and ways of access as well as their (sub)disciplinary focus. In addition, we will transgress the field of textual publications and give a short introduction to finding research data.

perspectives of those attending the event. Specifically, the following questions will be addressed through discussion:

- How can vulnerable learners' inclusion, participation and lifelong learning be better supported through adult education/VET?
- What communication patterns between different stakeholders are seen as most effective, specifically for cultivating active citizenship for vulnerable young adults?
- How can stakeholders develop a more clear approach to vulnerability and vulnerable youth (what is meant by 'vulnerable')?
- How can we define the concept of active citizenship in adult education settings?
- How can access and collection of data through cross-national research provide insights to improve the quality and efficiency of adult education provisions to vulnerable groups?
- What can we learn from cross-national comparisons?

The event will provide a range of opportunities to develop networks and dialogue between researchers, thus contributing to enhanced communication, cross-national collaboration and mutual understanding across EU countries in the area of adult education and VET.

Curriculum Research Methods: Studying curriculum in its different forms and across levels

The renaissance of both curriculum making and curriculum theorising could be seen across Europe. It is highly desirable that this renewed interest in curriculum is accompanied by empirical research into different forms of curriculum existence. This workshop will introduce several methods for analysing curriculum at different levels - from transnational to national, regional, school and classroom level. A brief plenary introductions of individual methods will be followed by a series of roundtable carousels that provide the opportunity to discuss the methods with the experienced researchers in small group sessions. Each participant will have chance to attend up to three sessions as each presenter will run three consecutive sessions.

Stephen Edgar will show how approaches from Corpus Linguistics (CL) could be used to analyse curriculum policy texts. CL uses computer software to analyse naturally-occurring language, including written texts. CL has a number of advantages, including the ability to deal with large amounts of text and the potential to identify linguistic features which may not be apparent using other, more qualitative, approaches. Stephen is using CL as part of a mixed-methods research project, which explores concepts of equality within Scottish curriculum policy. Some of the benefits and challenges of using CL to analyse a corpus of curriculum policy texts will be reflected.

Natasha Ziebell will focus her tutorial on the use of Computer Assisted Qualitative Data Analysis Software (CAQDAS) for analysing how the intended curriculum is enacted in classroom settings. The strategies for 'assembling data' will be demonstrated, including the compilation and familiarisation process in preparation for qualitative analyses. We will address the affordances of CAQDAS for ‘disassembling’ the data when conducting inductive and deductive analyses of classroom documents and video/audio recordings. Studiocode™ and NVivo™ will be used to show illustrative examples of how CAQDAS can support efficient and sophisticated analysis of classroom data to complement manual processes. (Yin, 2011; Ziebell & Clarke, 2018).

Sinem Hizli Alkan will introduce ego-nets (one of the network research methods) as a tool for exploration of curriculum making by teachers. Ego-nets offer an opportunity to understand the structural and relational features of an individual teacher’s network. In the context of curriculum, this is important as teachers make sense through their social interactions, which in turn may influence their engagement with curriculum depending on the nature and the dynamics of the formal and informal networks (e.g. strength, trust, the kinds of information flow, etc.). (Bellotti, 2015; Crossley et al., 2015)

Design-based research will be presented by Nienke Nieveen as the systematic analysis, design and evaluation of curriculum artefacts or interventions with the dual aim of generating research-based solutions for complex problems

Methodological Approaches to Research on Multilingualism and Language Education: Assessment of language competencies

The workshop will address the issues of language assessment in linguistically diverse contexts. It aims to focus on both relevant dimensions of language assessment: the dimension of instruments’ development and the dimension of data analysis. The purpose is, therefore, to introduce and critically discuss the challenges of developing new instruments for parallel assessment of multiple languages, the reliability and validity of newly developed instruments as well as the comparability of tests across different languages. It will also address the relevant aspects of integrating language assessment into the research design.

The workshop will focus on instruments to assess language competencies based on the evidence from the German research projects on multilingualism and language education. This includes instruments that assess students’ competencies in the majority and heritage languages as well as in selected foreign languages. The workshop is organized in a collaboration of the German coordination office for multilingualism and language education (KoMBi), the German panel study “Multilingual Development: A Longitudinal Perspective (MEZ)” and the EERA Network on Language and Education (NW31). KoMBi coordinates a research cluster in Germany that comprises of ten projects that investigate different aspects of multilingualism and language education. For this workshop, the MEZ project was selected from the KoMBi research cluster to provide the research based examples for multiple language assessment. With more than 2000 students having participated in this study and the broad scope of tested languages (Russian/Turkish (HLs), German (ML), English, French/Russian (FLs)), this longitudinal study comprises of the unique and extensive receptive and productive data on students’ multilingual literacy skills in Germany.

The first part of the workshop will provide a general overview of the existing language assessment practices of the KoMBi projects. In this part, selected instruments from the German research cluster “Language Education and Multilingualism” will be presented. The participants will get insights into how and which instruments are used and which language competencies are measured in educational practice, and advancing our knowledge about the characteristics of these interventions and the processes of designing and developing them. Formative evaluation is a crucial feature of design-based research. The empirical data give ground for both outputs of a design research study: a high-quality and completed artefact and accompanying design principles. (Nieveen, Folmer, & Vliegen, 2012; Plomp & Nieveen, 2013a, 2013b)

The item-oriented approach to international large scale assessments (ILSA) data can inform the attained curriculum analysis. Dominik Dvořák will show that the vast amount of data collected in ILSA of pupils’ achievement is underused and can inform the curricular frameworks evaluation. To understand deeply the problems of curricula, however, the analyses need to go beyond the mean PISA or TIMSS scores and study the pupils’ relative success rates in individual items (country subject profiles). This could identify the problematic curriculum areas for the subsequent scrutiny (e.g. by comparative analysis). Data sources and available tools will be demonstrated. (Olsen, 2006; Rutkowski & Rutkowski, 2009) red to address which research questions.

The second part will focus on the language assessment based on the experience gained in the MEZ project. At first, a general introduction to the project will be provided to discuss the integration of language assessment into the research design. After that, the selected instruments applied in this project to assess language competencies will be presented. It will be shown which languages competencies are assessed in the majority, heritage and foreign languages and how instruments were adapted to assess languages competencies in the heritage languages Russian and Turkish as well in the foreign languages English, French and Russian. General principles in the adaption of instruments and challenges will be pointed out. The selected instruments include writing prompts developed for the assessment of productive written language skills and a c-test as a measure of general language proficiency.

Naturally, discussing instruments to assess language competencies is country and context specific since it includes specific linguistic characteristics of the given language constellations. Considering this, the workshop will rather focus on general principles of language assessment, present selected examples and focus on what kind of instruments are used to answer specific research questions.

The workshop will provide opportunities for interaction and discussion as well as for an application of the presented content to language assessment in the countries of the participants.

The objectives of the workshop are:

- To get an overview of instruments used to assess language competencies in research projects on multilingualism and language education
- To be aware of challenges in the assessment of multiple languages
- To learn about principles concerning the adaption of instruments to assess language competencies

Publishing in Education Books and Journals (Some Tips to Help You Succeed)

Wednesday 4 September, 09:00 – 10:30

VMP 8 – Room 208

This session is aimed at newly emerging researchers who want to learn more about the journals and books processes and are looking to improve publication success in their chosen format. It has been designed to provide participants with a generic, basic introduction to the process of journal manuscript preparation and peer review and book proposal preparation with specific reference to education journals and books. Although the majority of the workshop is in the form of a presentation given by members of the Routledge/Taylor & Francis Education Journals and Books Editorial team, there will be time for Q & A with the help of selected authors and journal editors. Full of helpful tips and guidance, the content of the presentation can be applied to the majority of education journals and books, irrespective of Publisher.

Maximising the Visibility and Impact of Your Research

Wednesday 4 September, 17:15 – 18:45

Faculty of Law - Room 12

Around 2.5 million research papers are published every year, so understanding how you can make your work stand out is vital. Aside from making your work as visible as possible to the academic community, you increasingly need to consider how your work has relevance and impact beyond the academic arena – and how you can make that happen!

In this presentation I will discuss maximising the visibility and impact of your work by incorporating outreach activities into the research process from the very start, as well as promoting your final published work to a variety of audiences. We will discuss social media for research, making use of conferences, the metrics, tools and resources at your disposal, writing for a non-academic audience, optimising your paper for discoverability and more!

Grounded Theory with ATLAS.ti

Thursday 5 September, 09:00 – 10:30

Faculty of Law - Room 12

Do you want to conduct a Grounded Theory (GT) study and would like to analyze your data using CAQDAS? In contemporary books on qualitative methods you find pointers and references to computer-assisted analysis, but little on how to translate manual ways of going about analysis to a computer-assisted way. It seems as it would be self-explanatory. In this workshop you will learn how to implement grounded theory analysis with the support ATLAS.ti. What does „coding“ mean in a computer environment? How can GT open coding or axial coding be implemented? How and with what type of tools can memo writing be integrated? Thus, you will learn how the various aspects of the methodology can be translated into software tools. In the workshop, you will practice some of the steps, others I will demonstrate by way of an example.

Please bring a laptop to the workshop. If you do not have a license yet, please install the demo version in advance:

Open source publishing with IEA - Meet and Greet IEA

Friday 6 September, 12:15 – 13:15

VMP 8 - Room 106

Over its more than 60 year history, IEA studies have collected a wealth of international, comparative data on the structure and functioning of education systems and how they are related to student achievement. IEA (International Association for the Evaluation of Educational Achievement) was founded at the UNESCO Institute for Education in Hamburg and experts at our IEA Hamburg office continue to be leaders in the field of international large-scale assessments in education.

Current IEA studies measure student achievement in subjects such as mathematics and science (TIMSS), reading (PIRLS), civic and citizenship education (ICCS), and computer and information literacy (ICILS). These data are freely available and IEA is committed to supporting researchers, practitioners and policy makers to make use of the valuable information to help understand and improve learning.

During this informal, meet and greet session, attendees will be introduced to some of the opportunities available for researchers interested in working with IEA data. These include workshops and training seminars held by IEA and the IERI academy, open access publishing with Springer via the IEA Research for Education Series and Large-scale Assessments in Education journal, and the IEA Compass: Briefs in Education series which connect IEA study findings to recurrent and emerging questions in education policy debates at the international and national levels.

Attendees will have the chance to address their queries to the key people behind each of these initiatives. A light lunch will also be provided.

30 August - 28 September

Outdoor construction on campus in the meadow behind the faculty of education (VMP8)

Work plays a central role in life in contemporary society. And thus also for inclusion, the equal participation of people with disabilities. From 2 to 28 September, 16 excellent photographic works on this subject will be exhibited on campus.

The awarded artworks portray inclusion in various but concrete ways, ranging from emotional snapshots to classic reportage series and analytically designed photo series. The exhibited artworks are the result of a photo competition arranged by the Berufsgenossenschaft für Gesundheitsdienst und Wohlfahrtspflege (Employers liability insurance association for health and welfare).

Even the form of presentation of the exhibition received a prize: the outdoor construction created by the bontempo group in Hamburg won the German Design Award 2019.

Helga Breuninger Stiftung - Intus 3 – The Leap from Teaching to Learning – development, research and evaluation

Intus 3 produces a relevant contribution to de-stressing the teacher, combined with an increase of learning intensity and teaching quality. In the system you bring your own energy to bear with agility and awareness, and at the same time act mindfully. In each module we use online coaches and film scenes to lead you through the experience.

- Module 1: Basic Mindset of a Resonant Relationship “sensing needs and wants empathically”
- Module 2: Dialogic Interventions “intuitively giving over to what is happening in the relationship”
- Module 3: Body language “students clearly reveal their mental states and feelings, and these affect you, the teacher, directly”
- Module 4: Compass for a good orientation, take a detour through relationship”
- Module 5: Personalized Learning “who works harder you or your students?”

Personalized learning makes a fundamental difference in your relationship to teaching. It redefines your professional approach. Building on that, it comes quite naturally to work within the concept of inclusion. Diversity, integration and talent development will no longer be irksome extra homework. Instead, they are formed as natural results of personalization.

It's learning as flow.

EERA Developments and Activities 2018 - 2019

Introduction

It is a great pleasure to deliver my first annual report as President of EERA. The last 12 months have been a rewarding time for EERA in many respects. We continued to focus on and deliver those activities that are at the core of our mission: a successful conference, an inspiring EERA Summer School and a wide range of network activities. EERA was also able to innovate and extend its annual programme by offering Academic Writing Workshops, facilitating the launch of a Research Methods book, initiating a new book series in partnership with Springer and collectively celebrating with our colleagues in our journal EERJ their acceptance by the SSCI. It is important to note that none of these activities could have been completed without the active support of our partners, members, networks and of course our Office.

ECER 2019

We would like to thank Universität Hamburg and the Deutsche Gesellschaft für Erziehungswissenschaft (DGfE) for planning ECER 2019, 02-06 September. This year's theme is "Education in an Era of Risk – the Role of Educational Research for the Future". ECER and ERC 2019 expect about 3000 participants from almost 80 countries and will host 990 sessions, including 24 joint and 20 EERA sessions. The Emerging Researchers' Conference counts 350 registered participants, 230 of them also are registered in ECER.

Since ECER 2017, the ECER programme has continued to grow by including a series of capacity building workshops, largely but not exclusively organised via the EERA networks.

2019 is the first year that ECER will offer 6 keynote speakers, allowing the conference to address a wider range of topics and to generate a broader basis for the conference discussions.

ECER and the Environment

Since 2015 EERA has been working on lowering the environmental impact of the conference. Participants have the possibility to opt out of receiving a printed conference programme for ECER. In 2019 approximately 70 % of the delegates decided to take advantage of this resource-saving option. Instead of the printed programme, they chose to use the conference app or the online programme which, unlike the printed programme, will be updated regularly. 70% is the highest percentage since EERA introduced this option. EERA also worked closely with the local organisers to reduce waste and packaging, for example with regard to the coffee breaks, social events and lunches. We would like to thank the local organisers of EERA 2019, who supported these initiatives with educational activities prepared and led by students. During one sustainability activity, for example, ECER delegates will be helped to construct insect hotels and seed bombs while being given insights into the dangers of insect depopulation and related environmental challenges. The Local Organisers also successfully attracted additional funding for reusable coffee mugs, substituting plastic cups and water dispensers, helping to reduce the numbers of 'single use' plastic bottles. EERA is continuing the partnership with "MyClimate", a Swiss non-profit organisation engaged internationally in climate education and awareness to support climate protection projects. Conference participants are invited to calculate and offset the CO2 emissions of their travel by donating towards the climate protection projects of "myclimate": <https://www.myclimate.org>.

Upcoming ECERs

ECER 2020 will take place in Glasgow 24 – 28 August 2020. The conference theme is "Educational Research (Re)connecting Communities". In keeping with our recent initiative we have chosen to keep the number of keynote speakers at six. More information on the submission process and the conference venue of ECER 2020 will soon be available on the EERA website.

ECER 2021 will be held at the University of Geneva (Switzerland) (UNIGE). Just like the city of Geneva itself, the university enjoys a strong international reputation, both for the quality of its research and the excellence of its education.

In 2022 we are excited to bring the conference to Yerevan, Armenia. Not only is Yerevan a beautiful city, but going "east" with the event is a signal and an invitation to researchers from eastern parts of Europe who for many reasons cannot access ECER as easily as central European colleagues. It also acknowledges the significant expansion that EERA has undergone in recent years and provides an opportunity for one of our more recent members to bring its rich educational research tradition to the wider EERA family.

Honorary Network Members

In 2013 EERA initiated a process whereby networks could propose "Honorary Network Members". This was instituted in order to allow networks to value the contributions of a convenor in the context of their collective history. Honorary Network Membership is granted by EERA Council based on recommendations put forward by EERA networks. Following nominations at ECER 2018, the following esteemed researchers were awarded Honorary Network Membership:

Awarded 2019

- Meinert Meyer | 27. Didactics - Learning and Teaching
- Helene Ärlestig | 26. Educational Leadership
- Bob Jeffrey | 19. Ethnography
- Birgit Pepin | 24. Mathematics Education Research
- Ton Mooij | 16. ICT in Education and Training
- Joyce Goodman | 17. Histories of Education

EERA's happiness at having a chance to formally recognise the contribution of these notable researchers was tempered by the passing of Prof Meinert Meyer. Prof Meyer was a pivotal figure in the development of NW 27 and his passing was a shock not only to the network but to the wider EERA family. We would like to offer our sincerest sympathies to his family, friends and colleagues.

Emerging Researchers' Group

EERA is committed to the next generation of educational researchers and therefore hosts and supports the Emerging Researchers' Group (ERG). The activities of this group include the two day Emerging Researchers' Conference (ERC) that immediately precedes ECER, a bursary system and academic paper and poster awards. EERA also organises season schools to facilitate and support the professional development of this critically important group. The Emerging Researchers' Group is coordinated by the link convenor Saneeya Qureshi. She also represents EERA's Emerging Researchers' Group in the Doctoral and Early Career Network (DEC) of the World Education Research Association (WERA).

Following an initiative of the ERG Link Convenor, the local organisers of ECER 2019 organised two lunch time events where emerging researchers could meet with local researchers and colleagues from EERA networks. This was organised to enable the creation of links and to facilitate exchanges with the hosting research community as well as ease the transition from membership of the Emerging Researchers' Group to EERA networks. A senior mentor supports the ERG and from ECER 2019 Satu Perälä-Littunen from University of Jyväskylä, Finland will follow the current Senior Mentor George Head.

EERA Summer School

In 2010 the EERA Council initiated a summer school for emerging researchers. The tenth edition in 2019 focused on educational methodology and was entitled 'Quantitative and Mixed Methods Research Designs: From Designing to Publishing'. The course was held in July 2019 at Masaryk University, Brno, Czech Republic. 63 PhD and Doctoral students from 22 countries participated in the 2019 school.

Academic Writing Workshops

2019 saw the successful start of the EERA Academic Writing Workshops, which address one of the major challenges facing educational researchers from non-English speaking countries - the requirement to publish their research in English. EERA is acutely aware of the pressures that this places on researchers in our member associations and as a result, EERA members proposed that the Association develop and pilot an Academic Writing Workshop. Supported by EERA, member associations can offer an academic writing workshop titled "The Essential Guide to Publishing Peer Reviewed Articles" which is facilitated by EERA experts. The workshops have already taken place at three European Universities: in Lithuania, Hungary and Italy. During the one day workshop, participants explore a wide range of topics designed to help them develop writing, editing and re-writing skills in English as well as gain knowledge about journal publication processes. The Academic Writing Workshops are aimed at capacity building and thereby clearly support the central mission of EERA.

EERA Networks

EERA currently hosts 32 networks that are the academic organising bodies of the reviewing and programme planning processes for ECERs. Their link convenors meet annually in spring in order to discuss overarching network issues as well as EERA policies and contribute to Council discussions on EERA strategy. In April 2019 EERA network link convenors met in Berlin and discussed how EERA could further support the networks, how EERA could respond to challenges and opportunities of open access publishing and how EERA could develop ways to further scholarly exchange via a range of new platforms including the development of an EERA blog.

I am proud to confirm that the networks and the Council's discussions have resulted in the organisation of several sessions and activities during ECER 2019 and will also lead to the launch of an EERA blog in the very near future.

Further Network Activities from September 2018 to August 2019

Most networks have established their own websites and some run mailing lists. In order to find out more, please consult the EERA website at <www.eera-ecer.de/networks/>. Some EERA Networks have successfully organised additional events or projects in the past year which were supported by EERA. These include:

NW 17 - History in Education: Summer School

The Histories in Education Network held its tenth summer school for Postgraduate Students in 2019. The summer school took place at the Liverpool John Moores University from 13 to 16 June 2019. The summer school was funded by Stitching Paedagogica Historica and the History of Education Society, UK. The project was also by the International Standing Conference for the History of Education (ISCHE).

NW 19 – Ethnography: Season School "Ethnography unbound: Responding to late modernity's mobilities and challenges"

NW 19 held a winter school in Barcelona in December 2018. "Ethnography unbound: Responding to late modernity's mobilities and challenges" welcomed applications from postgraduate students and early career researchers in the field of Education with an interest in broadening their perspective on social and educational problems and ethnographic research.

NW 10 organised a Writing Retreat in parallel to the 2019 Emerging Researchers' Conference.

More information on the upcoming events in 2019 and beyond can be obtained from the EERA website.

Publications

The past few months have been particularly rewarding with respect to EERA publication. The European Educational Research Journal (EERJ), the long-standing flagship journal of EERA was accepted in SSCI in July 2019. We see this as clear sign of the high-quality work of the editorial team and are indebted to the lead editors Eric Mangez and Maarten Simons for their efforts and contributions to the development of the journal.

EERJ has been published by SAGE since 2015 and publishes 6 issues per annum. As of 2016, free access to EERJ is available for all members of EERA's member associations. EERA member associations can either arrange access for their members via a login on their websites or via the creation of individual logins for their members at the SAGE website. If you have not been contacted by your national association about how to obtain the free access to EERJ, please get in touch with your member association. Every year, EERJ considers the five best papers in the Emerging Researcher Best Paper Award competition for publication. For more information see: <http://www.eera-ecer.de/eej-eeas-journal/>

In addition, during ECER 2019 EERA launched the book "Doing Educational Research", a publication which explores educational research from a wide range of perspectives. It emerged as a result of requests from participants at EERA's summer schools and as such should have particular relevance for emerging and early career researchers – although it is targeted at the broad community of educational researchers. The book brings a unique European voice to the discussion around research and research methods and draws on the collective experience and knowledge of EERA networks which were responsible for the writing and editing of the publication.

In other important publishing news, EERA also recently agreed to a partnership with Springer Nature to produce the series "Transdisciplinary perspectives in educational research". This partnership will see the publication of a minimum of 3 books per year and it aims at offering networks the possibility to publish research that draws on their collective disciplinary and professional expertise.

Publication Partnerships

Studia Paedagogica

EERA's Emerging Researchers' Group and the editorial board of "Studia Paedagogica" are cooperating in the publication of high-quality papers given at the Emerging Researchers' Conferences. Papers to be published are selected from those handed in and reviewed for the Best Paper Award, thereby also enhancing the profile of the award as more submissions find their way to publication.

Networks and journals

- Network 02 VETNET, runs an open access Journal for Research in Vocational Education and Training. For more information see: <http://www.ijrvet.net/>
- NW 08 Research on Health Education is cooperating with Emerald's "Health Education" Journal.
- NW 11 Educational Improvement and Quality Assurance cooperates with Emerald's "Quality Assurance in Education"
- NW 18 Research in Sport Pedagogy is cooperating with "Cultura Ciencia Deporte", UCAM

- Some of the EERA networks invited journal editors to offer a “Journal Meet & Greet” during ECER 2019 to strengthen ties between networks and journals and help ECER participants to submit their papers to relevant journals.

External Relations

EASSH (European Alliance on Social Sciences and Humanities) and ISE (Initiative for Science in Europe)

EERA is an active member of EASSH, the European Alliance on Social Sciences and Humanities and ISE (Initiative for Science in Europe). Both organisations work on influencing European funding policies, ISE from the perspective of all sciences and EASSH specifically focusing on social sciences and humanities. EASSH, of which EERA is one of the founding members, engaged in an active lobbying campaign to enhance the position of SSH in the new European funding programme, Horizon Europe and EERA participated in this process at the level of national associations and as a collective group. ISE was also involved in an extensive campaign lobby for the overall Horizon Europe budget to be increased to 100 billion euro.

WERA (World Educational Research Association)

EERA remains an active and founding member of the World Educational Research Association. The EERA president took part in the WERA General Assembly hosted at the AERA conference in Toronto and at the WERA Focal meeting hosted by the Japanese Educational Research Association in Tokyo. This year marked the 10th anniversary of the foundation of WERA and EERA offered symposia at both the Toronto and Tokyo conferences focusing on the role of EERA in developing a European research identity. WERA will reciprocate at this year’s ECER conference where it will host symposium “From Project Funding to Sustainability in Educational Reforms – Which Innovation Capabilities Do We Need?”. For more information on WERA, see <http://www.weraonline.org>.

EERA Communication

EERA is committed to disseminating information relating to its activities and educational research in general through as many formats as possible. For this reason EERA can be found on Twitter (#ECER_EERA) and Facebook (<https://www.facebook.com/EERA-European-Educational-Research-Association-124579990968775/>). The Emerging Researchers’ Group can be followed on LinkedIn. The re-launch of the EERA website has given EERA the opportunity to integrate more media into its communications and EERA is currently in the process of producing a wide range of relevant content including videos of interviews with network link convenors for EERA website.

EERA Officers

At our Bolzano meeting in 2018, Petra Grell, TU Darmstadt, joined the Executive Board in her role as Networks’ Representative on Council Elect. She will take over the role of Networks’ Representative from Jani Ursin following ECER 2019.

At our March Council meeting Maria Figueredo was elected to the position of Secretary General for a second term.

EERA Membership

Over the past few years, EERA has applied a more proactive strategy in approaching a number of researcher groups/universities in countries without national association representation. This has been done in order to find out if they are interested in building an association and joining EERA. This has led to a list of successful new co-operations. In March 2019, EERA Council accepted Luxembourg Educational Research Association (LuxERA) as a full EERA member. Bulgaria was accepted for Candidate membership at the September council meeting. EERA is currently in discussion with a number of partners in different countries and hopes to welcome new members in the coming years.

EERA Council

EERA is governed by its Council and over the past year there has been an active engagement by all members of this body with a view to continuing to develop the Association. This year has seen extensive work undertaken to develop a strategy document which will guide EERA over the next four years. This process saw council members and networks volunteer to work in a wide range of working groups in order to help shape the future direction of EERA. The strategy is an ambitious one and includes proposals to provide more support for EERA networks, further support for researchers from low-GDP/non-central European countries, developing new forms of scholarly publications and exchange, investigating into open access strategies. EERA depends hugely on the voluntary work of council members and while their work often remains invisible the Association could not exist without their vital and energetic contributions. In order to recognise this, EERA has begun a process of officially thanking the home institutions of EERA council members for their support and active engagement.

ERC Panel Discussion - Session B

Monday 2 September, 9:30 - 10:30
VMP 5 - Lecture Hall A

Where should we draw the line? And what does the line consist of anyway? Research ethics in culturally diverse contexts

Research involving marginalised groups or individuals plays an important role in inclusive processes not only with the results and information they provide in the research field, but also regarding the approaches taken to the research. On one side, research can inform about the experience of discrimination, marginalization and exclusion and/or promote good practices in social and educational fields. On the other side, the research should itself constitute good examples of inclusive practices, as it is expected to enhance participation and empowerment of those groups or individuals who are not otherwise given a voice.

This round table focuses on the capacity of research methods to be inclusive, critically discussing the main issues that concern this challenge. Some questions will engage the audience in an interactive discussion.

How can research methods become inclusive? Can all research methods be inclusive? What criteria define inclusive research methods? How can research methods involving marginalised groups or individuals be consistent with the aim of inclusion throughout their processes?

The contributors deal with all these open questions, reflecting on the extent of inclusivity ensured by different research methods.

Some specific research examples will be presented, such as Student Voice approaches, participatory and ethnographic research, considering the reasons why they could represent good practices in terms of inclusivity.

Taking into account different approaches and experiences, the round table could help identifying the constitutive elements of inclusive research methods.

Speakers:

Andreas Bonnet and Elisabeth Bracker, University of Hamburg

Lunch Break Event Monday

Pre-registration required, see information below

You are warmly invited to attend the Emerging Researchers' Group Conference Lunch. This informal lunch session will be facilitated by experienced academics and the ERG co-conveners who will help you chart your way through the conference program. This is also a wonderful opportunity to connect with fellow 'emerging' researchers.

The following themes will be addressed within the session. The themes will shortly be introduced at the beginning of the session. After this introduction you are welcome to participate in informal discussions and ask questions pertaining these themes to the experienced academics and co-conveners.

Doing Educational Research

We are pleased to announce that we will be joined by the Editors of 'Doing Educational Research: Overcoming Challenges in Practice'. This SAGE/EERA book was developed as a result of feedback from PhD students and addresses challenges researchers have encountered in their projects. In this there are accounts of how experienced researchers handled entry into the research field, how they discussed and managed research result that posed problems when accounted back to the field, and how doing research in a second language, i.e. English, creates a complex set of challenges from interpretation to communication of your research.

Networks, Networking and Development Opportunities

Connect with experts in your field by identifying your network and attending their programs. We will discuss opportunities and strategies for building your network during the conference and beyond.

Converting your conference paper into a publication

Explore the unique opportunities afforded to participants at the Emerging Researchers' Conference to maximize your publication success. We will discuss several possibilities the conference offers to receive feedback on your work, for example during and after your conference-presentation.

ERG Co-Convenors

Meet the Emerging Researchers' Group co-conveners who will share their recent experiences as Early Career Researchers and provide helpful tips for making the most of the conference experience.

You are invited to register for this event on the first day of the ERC 2019, Monday 2 September 2019. You can register near the EERA Desk where there will be some sign-up lists to which you can add your name. Please note that this opportunity is offered on a limited capacity, first-come, first-serve basis.

Network Workshops in Sessions E 13 and E 14

Because many Emerging Researchers find it difficult to make contact with experienced researchers in their field, we are delighted that two of the main EERA Networks have agreed to host Network Workshops this year at ECER 2018. These Network Workshops are a wonderful place for participants at the Emerging Researchers' Conference to make contact with European researchers who are working within their field of study. This may be one of the most beneficial sessions that you go to this year. Attending the ERC Social Event (Monday 3 September) is also an excellent opportunity for networking as the Link Convenors will join us there.

Session E 13

Monday 2 September, 15:30 – 17:00
VMP 5 - Room 2067

NW 28: Sociologies of Education: Positioning contemporary educational research

Paolo Landri, IRPPS - National Research Council, Italy

Emiliano Grimaldi, University Federico II, Italy)

The aim of the workshop is to open the space for a critical discussion on the role of educational research in the contemporary field of knowledge production on education, education policy and educational practice. Recalling directly the ECER 2019 general theme, the workshop intends to generate a collective and open reflection on what future for educational research should we struggle for among the possible futures that lie ahead of us, with a specific reference to the configuration of the field we inhabit, the publics we talk to, the politics of knowledge we practice and the effects of our agency as an educational research community.

To reach the above-mentioned objectives, the workshop will be organized in three sections.

First, recalling the experience and the debates developed in the last 7 years in the NW28 Sociologies of Education, the speakers will briefly set the scene for the discussion, suggesting that we could sketch our present as educational researchers as increasingly colonized by an epistemic framework that assembles an evidence-based epistemology, a 'what works' political rationality and a technocratic model of educational research. At the same time, we must be aware that the hegemonic ambitions of such a framework confront with a lively and multifaceted research field, with its multiple hierarchies of antagonistic knowledges, its division into disciplinary sub-fields, diverse configurations and individual and collective positioning. This epistemological struggle 'in the plurality' makes possible different positioning for educational researchers in the field of knowledge production. Using sociology as an exemplary sub-field, the presenters will employ Burawoy's work on public sociology as a general frame to outline a matrix of four different possible positioning for educational researchers (professional, policy, critical and public research) and will discuss each in relation to social, political, ethical and epistemological issues.

Second, participants will be asked to reflect in group work on the practice as researchers and their current research projects, positioning themselves in the present and for the future across the matrix and in relation to social, political, ethical and epistemological issues.

Third, groups will be asked to present their reflections in a final debate session.

The aim of the workshop is to offer a map of the field that could act as exchange platform for a discussion on the above mentioned topics among participants that extends also beyond the workshop itself. It stands also as an invitation to participate to the NW28 activities, that since its foundation in 2012 has the ambition to represent a space of reflection on the productive nexus between sociological theory, social epistemology, research politics and practice in the field of education.

Session E 14

Monday 2 September, 15:30 – 17:00
VMP 5 - Room 2194

NW 33: Gender and Education: Researching gender and education in Europe

Carol Taylor, University of Bath, UK

Andrea Abbas, University of Bath, UK

The network "Partnership in Education" (NW15) will be presented to better understand the perspectives offered to emerging researchers.

The issue of partnership is often seen as a simple agreement between two entities that will then delegate to others the practicalities of this teamwork. But, it is necessary to perceive the alliance for a task and a fixed time of social actors belonging to one or more networks of relations.

We have to bear in mind partnership as a "win-win" relationship, in which each partner can optimize the path to its goals". Otherwise, it is important for the actors in education to visualize the resistances and, that way, to see where the territory of "the other" begins (Bizzoni-Previeux, 2010).

Through the notion of network, it will not be to take as object of study the attributes of the individuals (sex, age, profession) but the relations and the interactions between the individuals. This promotes the understanding of both formal and informal sides of all social relations by focusing on the concrete relations observable between actors or institutions. It will be a matter of elucidating how the communication is organized.

The analysis of these networks will make it possible to identify the social forms that the actors put into place during their real interactions, that go through email exchanges, reports and/or formal/informal meetings. We do not start with an a priori classification of the social world but, starting from a grounded theory's perspective, we have to elaborate a theory based on observation. Several decision support tools are usually used. Three partnership analysis softwares will be considered and presented.

ERG Meeting - Session F

Monday 2 September, 17:10 - 17:45
VMP 5 - Room 0079

Each EERA network holds a network meeting during ECER to review the conference, to prepare for the next year and to establish the convenors' and reviewers' group. The network meeting is also a chance to meet with researchers within your field of expertise and interest and to get more involved in the EERA networks.

All interested conference participants are welcome to join this meeting.

Lunch Break Event Tuesday

Tuesday 3 September, 12:30 - 13:30
Pre-registration required, see information below

The Local Organising Committee and the Convenors of the Emerging Researchers' Group are delighted to inform you about a unique opportunity as part of the social programme that will take place at lunchtime on Tuesday 3 September during the Emerging Researchers' Conference 2019.

Following the success of last year's pilot, we are organising a "Lunch Break with Local Academics" that promises to be another engaging opportunity for participants. The event will be held from 12:30-13:30 on Tuesday 3 September 2018 in a dedicated area, where about 50 emerging researchers who pre-register will have the unique chance to discuss and exchange ideas around a focused topic with 7-8 local academics. This will be the perfect way for participants to share a meal and to get to know, meet, connect and network both with and their peers and local academics, sharing the latest ground-breaking insights on topics of their interest.

"Lunch Break with Local Academics" is an attractive informal opportunity for emerging researchers to socialise and to take part in the scientific community. The event is intended to give an informal opportunity in a designated location for networking, creating global connections and knowledge exchange during lunch time.

You are invited to register for this event on the first day of the ERC 2019, Monday 2 September 2019. You can register near the EERA Desk where there will be some sign-up lists to which you can add your name. Please note that this opportunity is offered on a limited capacity, first-come, first-serve basis.

Keynote - Session I

Tuesday 3 September, 13:30 – 14:30
VMP 5 - Lecture Hall B1

How Can Young Scholars Survive and Build a Career in Academia?

Theo Wubbels, Utrecht University, The Netherlands

Coming to a conference like the European Conference on Educational Research is one way to contribute to building a career in academia. Presenting a paper is another and even better one. Many emerging researchers pursue a career in academia: becoming an assistant professor and the steps beyond. Universities have fewer positions available than they supply PhD graduates who want to have such a position. To get such a position you first of all will have to survive during your PhD, to work productively with your supervisor and other young and experienced colleagues. Furthermore, you will have to make your CV as competitive as possible.

For those who are theoretically interested in a model that helps understand the pressures and opportunities for young researchers is available. In relation to this model I will present what young researchers can (or should?) do to build a career in academia. I will also approach the criteria that govern institution's decisions on hiring and promotion of staff from a critical stance and point to some developments in these criteria.

Closing Ceremony

Session J
Tuesday 3 September, 14:30 - 15:00
VMP 5 - Lecture Hall B1

An opportunity for us to take a look back at the Emerging Researchers' Conference 2019 and to announce the ERC Best Poster and the ERC Popular Vote Poster Awards. The closing ceremony enables participants to hear about the upcoming Emerging Researchers' Group activities that follow the ERC. Information will be provided about the upcoming Best Paper Award and key timelines. The ceremony also provides an opportunity for reflection on the lively and stimulating debates and discussions generated during the ERC, with a view to looking ahead to the next ERC and global opportunities to connect and offer 'new' researchers a space for discussion and collaboration with peers across Europe.

Speakers:

Drorit Lengyel, Local Organising Committee 2019

Joe O'Hara, EERA President

Saneeya Qureshi, Link Convenor Emerging Researchers' Group

George Head, Local Organising Committee 2020

Stephen McKinney, Local Organising Committee 2020

Workshops at the Emerging Researchers' Conference in Sessions K 01, K 02 and K 03

Workshop Session K 01

Tuesday 3 September, 15:30 – 17:30
VMP 5 - Lecture Hall B1

Making your Thesis Shine by Signposting your Journey

Shosh Leshem, Kibbutzim College of Education and Vernon Trafford, Anglia Ruskin University, UK

Doctoral research is required to 'make a contribution to knowledge'. To achieve that goal candidates have to combine certain critical signposts that demonstrate doctorateness. In this process, candidates will display scholarship, originality and specific aspects of presentation that collectively make their thesis shine. This will be appreciated by examiners. Examiners look for many features in doctoral theses. They consider certain factors to be critical because they are essential components of a doctoral thesis and represent pre-requisites that demonstrate high quality research. These include the candidate's choices of paradigms, philosophical assumptions and handling academic discourse to explain how the research was undertaken. Making their thinking visible on these issues involves justifying each research decision that is made. Thus, a doctoral thesis is expected to present writing that includes textual signposts that make the research process explicit. So, how can candidates be assisted to signpost these features in their writing?

The workshop will emphasize the inescapable pre-requisites for a thesis to be accepted as doctorally-worthy. These insights will help candidates appreciate the 'whole' and 'the parts' that form synergy between the account of the research that has been undertaken and the written text.

The presentation will include both theory and practice. Examples will illustrate how simple items of text and presentation will elevate the quality of that text for readers. Participants will be encouraged to interact with each other and discuss these issues in relation to their own research.

Workshop Session K 02

Tuesday 3 September, 15:30 – 17:30
VMP 5 - Room 0077

Realising your Potential as a Researcher

Kate Jones, Vitae, United Kingdom

Professional Development Planning is 'a structured and supported process undertaken by an individual to reflect upon their own learning, performance and/or achievement and to plan for their personal, educational and career development.' [1] As a researcher you are already committed to enquiry through your research. Professional development extends this process to your own skills, understanding, aptitudes and ambitions. Development as a professional involves more than building your research profile and research skills. Broader professional development is becoming increasingly significant as employers look for researchers who can 'add value' to their organisations. Competition for posts and use of short-term contracts mean that researchers, along with other professionals, have to be flexible and adaptable about what they can do.

Focusing on professional development can help researchers to:

- Get the most from their current role or studies
- Create a stronger profile for applications, whether for funding, promotion, or a new post
- Achieve a more effective life-work balance

This 2-hour workshop will offer a space for reflection on these topics as well as practical and engaging activities for career and professional development strategies including an introduction to the Researcher Development Framework.

Aims

- Encourage and equip researchers to critically reflect on their experiences and allocate time to their future career goals.
- Examine concepts around Personal / Professional Development Planning, specifically taking ownership over and influencing positively their career development and looking at specific ways of addressing potential career barriers.
- Understand the skills and attributes of successful researchers, including introduction to Researcher Development Framework (RDF).
- Engage with an approach to achieving a more effective life-work balance, to improve wellbeing.
- Reflect on issues related to early stage career and professional development.

In Europe, Horizon 2020 places firmer emphasis on strengthening emerging researchers' careers across member states. These themes are echoed across the world. The growing requirement to establish the career development of emerging researchers, is evidenced, for example by the European Charter for Researchers and Code of Conduct for the Recruitment of Researchers (2005) [3]. This workshop about enabling emerging researchers to reflect on their experiences and understand the attributes of successful researchers directly relates to one of EERA's core missions and the ERG objective of providing a European research community for Emerging Researchers. The workshop creates a valuable space for discussion and collaboration for emerging researchers' and their peers across Europe. Moreover, by addressing the issue of career strategies for emerging researchers, this workshop fosters the development of a strong, independent, Emerging Researchers' forum which will add to EERA's internal democratic accountability.

Workshop Session K 03

Tuesday 3 September, 15:30 – 17:30
VMP 5 - Room 0079

Writing for your Research Community, Writing for the EERJ

Eric Mangez and Maarten Simons; University of Leuven, Belgium, EERJ Editor

This session will discuss the purposes of research publications and its audiences, the process of journal selection, manuscript preparation and the issue of (blind) review procedures. The session will also include information about good practice in Open Access policy publishing and advice about the new problem of fake journals and how to avoid them.

Part of the session will be about the European Educational Research Journal (EERJ) as a medium for publishing about the changing landscapes of educational research across Europe and how to 'write' for a European audience.

Workshop Session K 04

Tuesday 3 September, 15:30 – 17:30
VMP 5 - Room 0079

Tools to Overcome Internal and External Barriers to Academic Writing

Anna Beck, University of Strathclyde and Itxaso Tellado, University of Vic-Central University of Catalonia

The aim of this workshop is to discuss and share a range of techniques, resources, strategies and tools that can be employed to overcome internal and external barriers to academic writing. To do so, we will unpack stories of writing success and failure, focusing on different aspects of the writing process.

When preparing to write, we are simultaneously faced with the fear of failure and the pressure of success. A number of concerns and questions can emerge in the researcher’s imagination and stifle activity when we think about, prepare and approach a writing task. When should I write? Why am I writing? Who am I writing this paper for? How do I present my findings in an interesting way? These concerns and questions, sometimes exacerbated by feelings of ‘imposter’ and ‘not belonging’ can inhibit our productivity. It is only when we acknowledge these concerns, and consider the ‘imposter syndrome’ as ‘public feeling’, (Breeze, 2018), that we can begin to explore ways to move forward.

Before we can begin to think about how to put these into practice, we need to acknowledge the collective challenges that we face as researchers in the neo-liberal academy. For this reason, we intend for this workshop to be participative in nature, providing opportunities for early career researchers to share their experiences and learn from each other, as well as the workshop facilitators.

Awards and Bursaries

Best Paper Award

After the Emerging Researchers’ Conference participants are invited to hand in full papers to the Best Paper Award, sponsored by MAXQDA. The submissions are reviewed by an EERA committee. A paper can be submitted by more than one person (to a maximum of 3), but the first and main authors must fulfil the criteria below:

Authors

- must be enrolled in a PhD programme or
- must have finished their PhD not longer than 6 years ago
- must be in the early stage of their careers (no professors).

The successful first author will be offered free entry to next year’s conference, will receive a travel budget and his or her paper will be considered for publication in the EERJ (European Educational Research Journal). The winner of the Best Paper Award is formally announced during the ECER Opening Ceremony on Tuesday, 11:00 - 12:30.

ERC 2018 Best Paper Winner:

Sara Franch, Free University of Bolzano-Bozen, Italy: “Global Citizenship Education: a new ‘moral pedagogy’ for the 21st century?”

Best Poster Award

The evaluation of the ERC posters takes place in two phases. Before the conference, electronic versions of the poster are forwarded to the Best Poster Prize Jury for Phase 1 reviewing. Phase 2 of the evaluation takes place at ECER during the poster presentations. The Best Poster Jury will convene on Monday 3 September 2018 to discuss their rankings and make a final decision about the winner. The judges evaluate the posters according to the following criteria: coherence in argumentation and methodology; awareness of previous work; speaking to a European audience; attractiveness; message and main points; balance: text to visuals; and overall impression. The winner of the ERC 2019 Best Poster Award will be announced during the ERC Closing Ceremony on Tuesday 3 September 2019. The winner will receive free entry to next year’s ERC and ECER Conferences (2020) in Hamburg and a travel grant, which will be payable after attendance at ERC/ECER 2020.

ERC 2018 Best Poster Winner:

Anna Heudorfer and Sinah Mielich, Faculty of Education at the University Hamburg, Germany

ECER Bursaries

Each year, EERA offers financial support to promising emerging researchers from European and other Low GDP countries to enable their conference participation. The ECER conference bursary consists of free entry to ECER, the Emerging Researchers’ Conference and a 550 € travel bursary. Free entry to ERC and ECER will be offered to five local emerging researchers.

The next call for bursary applications will be sent to all authors of submissions for ERC 2020.

The SAGE Bursary

Again SAGE Publishing kindly agreed to sponsor one of the bursaries to be awarded in 2019. The Sage Bursary is given to a promising student who is well into their PhD.

All information in this programme was as accurate as possible at the time of printing.

Please remember to check the “Updates to Printed Programme” list in the conference bag and/or on Notice Boards in the Check-in area for subsequent changes.

The online programme and the conference app will also be updated regularly.

Poster Sessions

The Emerging Researchers’ Conference will include four interactive poster sessions which will take place on Monday 2 September. In these sessions, each presenter will give a 10 minute talk about their poster. We would like to invite all ERC participants to attend the ERC Poster Exhibition located near the coffee spot in the Poster Tent on Tuesday during the coffee break 10.30 – 11.00 where they will have a chance to view all posters and talk with the poster authors.
